

INTERNATIONAL RECRUITMENT TOOLKIT

An interactive guide to encourage and enable good practice in the NHS.

CONTENTS

This is an interactive toolkit.

Use the colour coded bars and sub headings at the top of each page to navigate around the toolkit. The arrows at the bottom of each page will take you to the next or previous page and the home icon in the bottom right will bring you to this contents page. Look out for any underlined text to access useful resources and videos.

INTRODUCTION

ABOUT THIS TOOLKIT

This toolkit is for colleagues involved in leading and delivering international recruitment in the NHS. It aims to encourage and enable good practices and processes for the recruitment of all occupational groups. You can use this resource to plan your approach to overseas recruitment activity for the first time, or to review the quality and efficiency of your existing practices and processes.

It is for line managers and employers and should be used alongside the International Retention Toolkit to support your overall approach to recruiting and retaining international and domestic staff.

The toolkit has taken into consideration the NHS Long Term Workforce plan which was published in June 2023. It sets out how the NHS will address existing and future workforce challenges by recruiting and retaining thousands more staff over a 15-year period, and working in new ways to improve staff experience and patient care. The deliverables are train, retain and reform to support organisations who are actively recruiting from overseas and acknowledges the need to do this ethically.

It is important to ensure that your processes for overseas recruitment are effective and ethical, and that where possible, you work with partners, either across an integrated care system or regional footprint, to benefit from economies of scale.

This toolkit prompts you to think about how you can make a collaborative approach effective, as well as signposting to sources of advice and guidance on the practicalities of conducting successful international recruitment, and sharing tips and good practice examples from other NHS organisations. This resource has been commissioned by the Department of Health and Social Care and produced by NHS Employers in collaboration with NHS England. We would like to give special thanks to the reference groups of employers, staff and stakeholders and the many other contributors from across the sector involved in developing this resource.

How to use this toolkit

This interactive toolkit brings together everything you need to plan or review your approach to international recruitment. It takes you through a process of planning, preparing, implementing and evaluating your activity.

The good practice principles and examples throughout should be applied to all professions you are looking to recruit. There are also sections with a focus on the specific professional requirements for the recruitment of nurses and midwives and doctors.

International recruitment is most successful when it is given sustained focus. It is not a quick fix to your supply challenges, but it can be successful with full support from executive colleagues and with investment in teams to recruit, train and support overseas staff to thrive and realise their full potential.

There is also a instructional video on how to use this toolkit.

Don't forget the person behind the process

Getting the process right and following all immigration and professional registration requirements is essential, but don't lose sight of the person behind the process. Your international staff will require a great deal of personal and professional support to get settled into a new country and to adjust to the cultural and working differences of the NHS.

If you are to attract and retain staff from overseas you will need a comprehensive plan for induction, pastoral and professional support. Embracing a cross-cultural team with different leadership styles allows for a diverse workforce.

Consider employing a full time member of staff to lead on pastoral care and don't forget to learn from the lived experiences of previously internationally recruited staff. How do previous cohorts' lived experiences compare to the reasons that new and prospective international recruits have for wanting to live and work in the UK?

Watch our introductory video with Cavita Chapman, suicide prevention lead at Sussex Partnership NHS Trust. Cavita came from Trinidad to work as a mental health nurse in 2002, and shares her experiences of settling in the UK.

National context

Overseas staff make a significant contribution to the care of patients in the NHS. The system benefits greatly from their expertise and the new knowledge and skills they bring. In return, they must have access to support and development opportunities to enable them to progress their careers, either within the NHS or in their home countries, if they choose to return.

It is important to think about clear and transparent career progression pathways from day one, as many overseas staff will join the NHS with a wealth of experience from their home countries. If progression routes are not clear or accessible, overseas staff may look for opportunities elsewhere.

Routes into the NHS will change in line with the Long Term Workforce Plan through the development of apprenticeships and reform of medical education and training. The plan also aims to deliver productivity improvements through making the most effective use of emerging technologies such as artificial intelligence.

As employers focus on growing and sustaining ethical recruitment pipelines for internationally recruited staff, it is equally important that we retain as much of this workforce as possible. The Nursing and Midwifery Council's \(NMC\) data report for 2022–2023 shows that it had been the highest year for new joiners to the register since NMC was established in 2001. Almost 1 in 4 of those on the register trained outside the UK and half of all the new nurses registered in the UK had been trained in other countries. However, a UK systematic review suggests international nurses face challenges in integrating into their roles when recruited to work in the UK. These challenges are not exclusive to your international nurses and may be experienced by other international staff groups in your workforce.

Working as a system

Increasing international recruitment significantly across the NHS will require organisations to refocus efforts to ensure that processes are effective.

Working as a system means working in collaboration across organisational boundaries towards a shared goal that cannot be achieved by working in isolation. The focus is no longer on operating as sole organisations.

Systems must be enablers for the NHS organisations within them, making sure good practice is shared, facilitating lead recruiter models and collaborating to ensure all recruitment policies and processes are aligned, including administration, onboarding and pastoral support.

Working collaboratively has many benefits for all involved. For example, it removes internal competition for overseas recruitment, enables those new to international recruitment to learn from the challenges and solutions from others, and streamlines resources and processes required for international recruitment.

The FutureNHS Collaboration Platform stores the latest information, resources, and forums for collaborative international nurse recruitment, including packs on establishing collaborations, maternity and family support and masterclasses on topics such as immigration, collaboration and sustainability, and cultural awareness and transition.

Where and how do you start?

There are no right answers about where to start and there is no single way to do it.

Working in systems is mainly about building relationships and encouraging dialogue. You need to find ways, with all your partners, to coordinate the overseas recruitment process, or elements of the process, in order to scale it up and share the resource and cost burden.

There are likely to be multiple perspectives, with multiple objectives that may be unclear and even conflicting, making the prospect of working with partners feel challenging. But be encouraged by the fact that all your partner organisations will already have a shared understanding of the workforce supply pressures and a general agreement about the need for improvements. This is a great starting point. It just needs one part of your system to raise the issue and to start engaging with others.

Collaborative recruitment could take many forms. It could mean working with other NHS trusts, with integrated care systems (ICS's), or with local community groups in areas such as developing a strong pastoral care offer. The main goal of working as a system is to learn from and work with others to share learning and scale up services to better support the journey for overseas recruits.

There are also many different areas where collaboration is possible. Systems can work together on advertisements, interviewing, OSCE preparation, pastoral care, professional development and any other topic covered in this toolkit. The important thing to keep in mind is there is no one way collaboration should happen and will vary depending on local needs and resources available.

Check out our shared learning examples of how you can make great improvements in the efficiency and scale of international recruitment by working together.

The Leadership Academy conversation cards are a practical resource to help groups get talking and working together. Try using them in regional partner meetings or at network events to encourage a different way of thinking about collaboration.

What needs to happen?

The shift towards a collaborative approach to international recruitment will need a different way of working, and changes in mindset and behaviour from all organisations involved.

Before participating in a system approach it is important to consider what your organisation is looking for in a collaboration. Determine the level of commitment required, your capacity to act in new ways and assess your organisation's internal tolerances for collaboration and risk.

Also, find out what good practice is already happening. This toolkit will help you to discover some of the excellent examples of good practice in the NHS so you can build on what works well.

Is your organisation ready to collaborate?

To be effective, participating organisations must:

- realise their interdependency
- be comfortable with less autonomy
- be prepared to sacrifice organisational interest for the whole to benefit
- share resources and control, risk and rewards
- be willing to work for the collective good.

Not an easy undertaking but it can create greater outcomes than working alone!

Lead recruiter checklist

This resource shows you step by step how to become a lead recruiter from overseas in your region.

Become a lead recruiter checklist

- ✓ Establish your offer to the trusts/region.
- ✓ Establish clear roles, responsibilities, and liabilities in advance for you as the lead recruiter and any trusts involved. For example:
 - will the lead recruiter be responsible for marketing vacancies, sourcing candidates and/or processing applications?
 - who will shortlist?
 - who will interview? Will candidates be interviewed across the region, or will interviews be trust specific?
 - who will be responsible for pre-employment checks? If this is the lead recruiter, at what point will you hand over to individual trusts for sponsorship?
 - who will deliver the OSCE training?
 - what will be refunded to candidates (eg NMC registration, visa costs, CBT and OSCE tests, English language costs, accommodation costs etc)?
- ✓ Consider if the lead recruiter will pay for any upfront costs for the candidates, for example test payment, visas, flights, which would then be invoiced to each trust.
- ✓ Ensure there is access to a credit card with adequate funds.
- ✓ Determine how and when agencies and individual trusts be invoiced for any costs.
- ✓ Establish minimum experience criteria for selection (ie twelve months).
- ✓ Agree standard interview questions.
- ✓ If you are also using an agency, determine when you engage with the individual trusts.
- ✓ Create a standard level of pastoral care and OSCE training and core standards of care such as points of contact to set up bank accounts. Detailed information on pastoral care can be found in the international recruitment toolkit.
- ✓ Secure commitment from trusts on vacancy numbers.

Once you are a lead recruiter

- Stay up to date with workforce needs and trends as you will be planning at least six months ahead of arrivals.
- Ensure that trusts have 24/7 on-call arrangements for candidates when they arrive as part of their pastoral care (eg if there are flight changes).
- Maintain a strong relationship with trusts and keep sighted of vacancy data.
- Review and evaluate your processes based on trust, agency, IR framework and candidate feedback.
- Establish and maintain a close working relationship with NHS England and keep updated in terms of delivery, raising concerns, changes in the market, and up to date processes.
- Conduct audits to ensure compliance is at the appropriate level.
- Have a dedicated team member with expertise to keep sighted on changing guidance from Home Office, regulators etc.

National and regional support

NHS England has regional workforce and OD teams that are responsible for supporting and developing people practices across their regions, to make the NHS a great place to work. They take a holistic view of the local NHS workforce, ensuring that enough numbers of appropriately skilled and qualified people are secured through all supply routes, across all professions and at all levels.

These regional teams should be your first point of call. They will support organisations and systems to deliver good practice in international recruitment, and this support will cover the range of essentials outlined in this toolkit.

At a national level, NHS England have established a central international recruitment team to support systems and regions to implement international recruitment NHS England will also continue to lead on developing strong educational partnerships focused on the healthcare workforce, in conjunction with central government, to continue building the NHS's global reputation as a centre of excellence in healthcare education and training.

Future aspirations

Progress continues to be made to recruit overseas candidates in the areas of mental health, community, midwifery and allied health professionals (AHPs). This quick guide aims to improve the understanding of organisations and recruiting managers in the recruitment of international AHPs through highlighting the differences in process and registration, and recognising the specific challenges faced.

NHS England is running a national programme aimed to support NHS trusts that are keen to start or expand their AHP international recruitment offer.

Find out more about how to recruit overseas AHPs.

Our International Recruitment Network \(IRN\) is an opportunity for those working in the international recruitment space in their Trust to keep in touch with the latest developments, a safe environment to share current experiences and best practices, and network with colleagues working across the NHS.

By joining the IRN you will:

- Have access to our bi-monthly network meetings.
- Be a key contact to receive invitations, such as to participate in consultations or feedback on information you are experiencing in the system.

Good practice - collaboration in action

Background

In 2018, Yeovil District Hospital NHS Foundation Trust, now merged with Somerset NHS Foundation Trust, embarked on its own international recruitment campaign. Four years ago, the nursing turnover was 30 per cent and 43 per cent of leavers had been with the trust for less than a year. Nursing vacancies peaked at 83 with a forecast of 150 by 2018. Agency nursing spend was approximately £250,000 per month.

What the trust did

Yeovil created a new vision our candidates are at the centre of what we do, and Yeovil International Recruitment was made. Having established successful overseas promotional channels and a network of contacts, the trust was in a good position to be a lead overseas recruiter for other NHS organisations.

A dedicated team of experts were appointed and the OSCE programme was redesigned. The recruitment and nursing teams worked in partnership as a whole-hospital approach. A retention plan was developed to ensure that the nurses who arrived wanted to stay. The result is a process led by international recruitment experts, with no need for partnering trusts to reinvent the wheel and implement their own processes. Yeovil now partners with nine other NHS organisations.

The result

Zero ward vacancies, turnover reduced to 15 per cent (overseas nurses 11 per cent). Sickness dropped to 2.2 per cent (4.4 per cent national average). Monthly agency spends reduced from an average of £250K per month to less than £5K per month ward based.

Sharing success

As a result of Yeovil's own successes, the trust was able to start offering the service to trusts nationally supporting recruitment in over 40 organisations. 3000 Nurses including mental health nurses and midwives and 100+ AHPS.

More recently, Yeovil International Recruitment has started recruiting operating department practitioners (ODPs) and, as part of this training, is the first NHS trust to have an AfPP accredited essential anaesthetics transition programme to support ODPs and anaesthetic nurses with UK practice.

Yeovil International Recruitment's collaborative model means that it and its partners are benefiting from recruiting at scale and spreading the associated costs. Recruitment processes are also aligned among partnering organisations including administration, on boarding and pastoral support, helping to ensure a consistent experience for candidates and recruiters.

The trust led on all aspects of the recruitment process from interview to arrival (including English language tests, computer-based tests, NMC/HPCPC registration and visa support), completing the employment checks and providing regular progress reports to the hiring trust.

Lessons learned

Keep recruitment teams and key personnel as consistent as possible. Having key people change throughout the process can make things very challenging for the new teams coming in to an already established overseas recruitment programme.

Initially a trust needs to pay sponsorship for three years, but it is beneficial to budget for five years, as candidates are likely to want to apply for residency after five years. Yeovil advise to continue paying its sponsorship too, as forcing the candidate to pay the last two years may result in another organisation taking on your staff.

It is important to remember that there is a person committing to move their whole life to work in the UK. Arrival dates, once agreed, need to be honoured. It is vitally important that trusts have pastoral care and wellbeing support available on arrival.

The first six months in a new country and working as a new nurse in the UK is very daunting, so planning of induction, training and mentorship needs to be considered very carefully. It is also vital to ensure managers are prepared for the arrival of the international nurse, there will be additional pastoral care that needs to be considered as well as acknowledging cultural difference with any new arrival to the UK. It takes time to settle into a new life in the UK, managers need to be empathetic and patient as this is a life changing moment for their new employee.

PLANNING

WHERE TO START

International recruitment is a legitimate part of an organisation's workforce supply strategy, alongside many other longer-term and domestic solutions.

International recruitment is just one piece of the workforce supply jigsaw.

- Increasing training places.
- Apprenticeships.
- Return to practice programmes.
- New roles.
- Widening participation and inclusive recruitment.
- Service reconfiguration.
- Local recruitment campaigns.
- Talent management initiatives / career development.
- Retention strategies.
- Temporary staff.

As a starting point, your existing organisational workforce data will help to show what is happening with your workforce supply, for example vacancies and high workforce turnover. From this data you will be able to identify areas where international recruitment could be used to fill workforce gaps. Areas with the largest vacancy rates are likely to greatly benefit from international recruitment. Also, consider the workforce needs of your local health system. By reaching out to partners in an integrated care system or regional footprint there will be opportunities to start a discussion about the system requirements for coordinated recruitment processes, to reduce the resource and cost burden of the activity.

The essentials

Do you know what your workforce supply needs are and if international recruitment is a solution?

Have you explored the expertise within your local health system and the opportunities to collaborate?

What's your organisational workforce plan for the next few years and beyond?

How will international recruitment support your plan?

Numbers and skills needed

With a robust and well-rounded workforce supply plan you will be best placed to identify the number of staff you require from overseas and to secure the necessary investment. Engaging with clinical or ward managers early in the international recruitment planning process is essential, so everyone internally has the same expectations about the numbers and skills required.

If you are looking to recruit a large volume of staff from overseas, it is important to plan how you might phase this into cohorts. Consider the facilities and resources you have available to help you plan. What is the capacity of your training room? What resource do you have in your educational team? Are you limited by the available accommodation? These are all important considerations to help you plan your approach.

There is increased competition within the UK and around the world for health care professionals. With more trusts looking to international recruitment, candidates are often applying to multiple job postings or are members of multiple recruitment agencies. Final joiner numbers should therefore only be considered at the point of issuing the Certificate of Sponsorship.

Timescales

International recruitment campaigns are not a quick fix. Most success comes when it is given sustained focus by the organisation. The Health and Care Visa enables the fast-tracking of visa applications (decided within three weeks, and sometimes sooner if an individual chooses to attend an appointment either in or outside of the UK). However this is only one step of the process. It can take anywhere between six and 12 months for individual staff to start work with you after you've made the decision to undertake campaign activity, and sometimes longer for them to gain professional registration and fulfil the potential of the role.

Work out your deadlines during the planning stage but be prepared to be flexible as it will most likely take longer to find and recruit candidates overseas.

Delivery model

When planning how you will coordinate your international recruitment activity, there are some options to consider.

Can you collaborate?

Where possible organisations should be working in partnership. There are lots of advantages, including streamlining processes, reducing competition, and sharing expertise, as well as spreading the resource and cost burden of international recruitment.

By reaching out to partners, either across an integrated care system, regional footprint or just with a neighbouring organisation, there will be opportunities to coordinate the international recruitment process, or elements of the process.

See the Working as a System section for ideas about how you can make a collaborative approach effective.

Good practice example: Capital Nurse pan-London programme

Capital Nurse was established in 2015 and sponsored by NHS England as a programme of work being delivered through collaboration and collective action across all five integrated care systems (ICS) in London. CapitalNurse's vision is to "get nursing right for London" and to ensure that London has the right number of nurses, with the right skills in the right place. As a regional response to the NHS Long Term Plan and vehicle to support with delivering London's share of the national 50k nurse expansion programme, a pan-London overseas nursing recruitment model and onboarding offer was developed by NHS in 2020. This continues into 2024 and beyond and now consists of all London trusts who undertake international recruitment operating as a consortium under the banner of either Capital Nurse, Capital AHP or Capital Midwife; its core operating model ensures that any overseas nurse, midwife, and AHP recruited through the consortium(s) will have the same consistent standard and offer to support them regardless of which trust they are employed.

Good practice example: collaborating across an integrated care system

In 2020, Devon ICS began the process of formation with a number of trusts experienced in international recruitment. While the ICS came together, the Devon Alliance for international recruitment was established as a collaborative model for international recruitment focusing on reducing costs, which is supported by NHS England funding.

Between July and October 2021, 146 nurses have arrived in Devon with plans for expansion into other professions across health and social care roles.

In 2023, Devon Alliance continued to grow and develop their system approach by working collaboratively across the system which made it easier to navigate processes and create innovative solutions. They began by developing their brand and promoting it via networking, social media, webinars and their own youtube channel.

Following their success, they have been able to expand their international recruitment into allied health professionals (AHPs), midwives and social care across the ICS. The alliance is working with 42 independent social care providers to support with finding the most suitable candidates.

Devon Alliance believe that cultural readiness and pastoral support is vital when welcoming new recruits, so they work with providers to ensure each individual is prepared when moving to the UK. They include online information which gives them as much information as possible on living in Devon.

Good practice example: collaborating to support education and training

Brighton and Sussex University Hospitals NHS Trust has developed a preparation programme to support overseas nurse recruits through the objective structured clinical examination (OSCE).

The organisation has worked together with Western Sussex Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust and East Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust to combine cohorts and training. For example, when Brighton only had a cohort of two international recruits, colleagues at Worthing Hospital (Western Sussex) led the training processes for those staff alongside their own intake. Because of resource constraints, these candidates may have had to wait for a larger cohort to join and had a delayed start date had they not been able to join the neighbouring trust's training programme.

Pooling resources has the added benefit of helping the new recruits meet other colleagues starting at a similar time, and reduces the burden on training room and staff availability. They have also been able to have groups of candidates across two trusts complete mock OSCE tests together and practice clinical skills as a larger group.

Brighton and Sussex also helped develop an OSCE facilitators network, which began with ten members but now has over one hundred members, who share regular emails and meet to discuss lessons learned and top tips. Representatives from the NMC and OSCE test centres also attend the group sessions and are able to share comments and issues with these key stakeholders, which come from a united position. Examples of the group's successes range from this kind of lobbying to sharing best practice with trusts new to international recruitment on how to support staff through their OSCE.

You can find more details on how to sign up to the facilitators network in the overseas nurse recruitment section.

✓ Is there a national programme to join?

There could be opportunities to join a national programme for recruitment. You will benefit from economies of scale and from the expertise of a partner to manage some of the process. But, check that it will meet your needs and deliver the numbers and skills you require.

NHS England (what was Health Education England) is working with a number of countries, matching NHS workforce need with overseas training requirements and seeking out new bilateral educational relationships. Find out more about international recruitment programmes in development and how to get involved.

International recruitment programmes

Developing government-to-government educational programmes offering overseas staff placements with an employer in the UK.

- Widens access to specialty training: junior medical recruitment programme focused on supporting doctors into speciality training in general practice and psychiatry.
- Emergency medicine and clinical radiology: programmes delivered in partnerships with royal colleges to create fellowship posts with an educational offer in hard-to-recruit geographies.
- Medical Training Initiative (MTI): scheme offering a small number of overseas doctors a training placement with an employer in the UK for up to 24 months.

Good practice example - Global Learners Programme (GLP)

The Clinical Radiology Programme As part of the national Cancer Workforce Plan, HEE has co-developed a programme to enable the NHS to recruit 120 senior Clinical Radiologists into the NHS. The programme is delivered in partnership with the Royal College of Radiology (RCR), Apollo Radiology International, and Morcombe Bay University Hospital Foundation Trust.

- It has supported employers to turn vacant consultant posts into three year educational posts for Indian radiologists, with opportunity for candidates to progress to specialist registration and grade via Certificate of Eligibility for Specialist Registration (CESR) route.
- Developed India's first accredited centre for RCR OSCE exams, enabling candidates to demonstrate their competence to the GMC and employers via the FRCR2b.
- Includes a comprehensive induction and pastoral care offer to all candidates from joining the programme in India, their arrival, and throughout their three year programme.

✓ Will you use a recruitment agency?

Many organisations choose to contract with a recruitment service provider to help with their international campaign activity. There are many benefits to using the services of an expert, particularly if your organisation has not done international recruitment before. You will need to factor in the additional fees for that service and make sure you are clear about each other's responsibilities in the process for the working relationship to be successful.

NHS England are working with the Workforce Alliance (a joint collaboration of NHS Procurement in Partnership and Crown Commercial Service), and Health Trust Europe (HTE).

The Workforce Alliance framework for international recruitment service providers and the HTE framework are available. These frameworks will ensure trusts can be confident that they are procuring international recruitment providers that are recruiting and supplying ethically.

It contains a clearly defined fee structure, to support trusts in understanding what fees will be applicable, and what services are included, with no hidden fees. The framework agreement uses the NHS Standard Form Terms and Conditions, so you know terms will be fair to both the supplier and your Trust. Since suppliers have been tested by the NHS Workforce Alliance, you can be assured that the appointed suppliers have the capability to provide the services you need.

You can find more information about frameworks on page 34 of toolkit and on NHS Employers framework webpage.

The essentials

Ensure clinical leads / ward managers are involved in the early planning of skills and numbers required.

Explore opportunities to work collaboratively to make improvements in the efficiency and scale of international recruitment.

Contact NHS England - there could be a national programme or partnership for recruitment you could join.

Consider if you will use a recruitment service provider to support your activity. If so, use a procurement framework.

PEOPLE RESOURCE AND COST

Your chosen delivery model will have implications for the resource and funding necessary to carry out international recruitment. All models have a cost and it will be important to assess whether, for example, a small value external contract requires additional internal resource, and any differences in expected time to hire. Working in partnership where possible means that you can benefit from scale, resources can be shared, and costs spread.

Project team

In the planning stage it is important to consider the people resource you'll need to coordinate activity from within the organisation. This will include recruitment and administration, HR professional support, clinical, educational and pastoral support and any contract management.

Existing staff with lived experience of relocating to the UK from overseas often have a unique understanding of the support overseas recruits may need to adapt to the cultural and working differences of the NHS. They can also play an important role in your project team and with the development of retention strategies.

International recruitment is most successful when there is investment in teams to recruit, train and support overseas staff. Consideration must also be given to the longer-term resource needed to provide professional and pastoral support, as not doing so will inevitably impact on your ability to retain your international staff. The management of ongoing immigration sponsorship requirements, including visa renewals and right to work checks, is also important to factor into longer-term resource.

Good practice example - strong project lead and oversight throughout

Newcastle upon Tyne Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust has a clear team structure for international recruitment activity, with project leads in HR, nursing and a project team focused on international recruitment working with them on this. The project lead's role is to ensure all key stakeholders are involved where necessary, including finance, procurement and clinical leads.

The trust appointed a senior nurse, Lesley, to work with international recruits once they arrive within the country. Ensuring there is a clear point of contact and making it a standalone role, as opposed to a bolt-on, has meant a much better staff experience, with more time available for Lesley to assist where necessary. Lesley's clinical background has also been useful in supporting new recruits in allowing her to answer key questions from international recruits. Her role is flexible, with it being full time when required and when a cohort arrives but shorter hours/part time once staff have settled into their new surroundings.

The key skills identified were being approachable, adaptable and a good communicator, and having the background and ability to teach clinical skills from a clinical knowledge and skills perspective and being available to work unusual hours on occasion.

Upfront costs

The upfront costs of recruiting from overseas are significant, and this can sometimes be a barrier. However, the return on investment (ROI) in the longer term means that it is a cheaper alternative to temporary agency costs. Your executive board will be looking for evidence of the ROI when you are seeking approval, and it is advisable that an element of international recruitment budget supports retention.

There are process costs to consider, which should be provided by the organisation.

- Sponsorship licence.
- Certificate of sponsorship.
- Immigration skills charge.
- Visa.

There are also process costs to the candidate.

- Language testing.
- Professional registration requirement.

These costs to the candidate are often provided by the organisation because recruits coming from less economically developed countries would struggle to pay them. The costs are sometimes paid as a loan to the candidate to be repaid through their salary, however this is a local policy decision.

Section 12 of the NHS Terms and Conditions of Service Handbook outlines terms of contractual continuity of service. Employers have discretion to take into account any period or periods of employment with employers outside the NHS, where these are judged to be relevant to NHS employment.

The exercise of discretion in paragraph 12.2 is a local matter. However, it is important that any decision is made in a fair, transparent and non-discriminatory way. An employer should be able to demonstrate that it has given due consideration to any equivalent service in another country and that such consideration was part of the process in deciding whether or not to award additional annual leave in each case, as set out under Section 12.2 of the NHS Terms and Conditions of Service Handbook.

You then need to consider what relocation package you will offer and the associated upfront costs.

- Will you help pay for flights?
- Will you offer accommodation?

- Will you provide a welcome pack of essentials? This could include things like groceries, bedding, a kettle, prepaid travel card, pay as you go SIM card.
- Will you offer a salary advance?

All these elements must be factored into the financial and logistical planning of your international recruitment activity.

Illustrative cost of one overseas nurse (from Philippines) based on a three year health and care visa

Cost to organisation:

Agency fee	£2500
Immigration skills charge	£3000

Documentation fee.....	£90
Cost of interview process.....	£300
Subsidised accommodation.....	£600
Organisation subtotal.....	£8,193

Cost to candidate (often provided by organisation):

Language test (OET).....	£310
NMC computer based test	£83
NMC OSCE (first attempt).....	£794
NMC evaluation and registration	£163
Immunisation tests.....	£300
Candidate subtotal.....	£1,650
Total.....	£9,843

Good practice example - financial relocation package

The below examples of financial relocation packages will help you put together a plan for your own organisation's relocation package. You are encouraged to consider all the elements that will maximise your chances of attracting staff and helping their transition to the UK. These arrangements should apply to all occupational groups.

Contractual repayment clauses

Because the resource and costs associated with international recruitment are significant, it is not unusual for an organisation to insert a repayment clause in contracts of employment, to recover upfront costs if the international recruit leaves employment within a given period.

Individual trusts can decide on the terms and conditions of employment contracts and on some occasions will claim back costs where needed, including travel and accommodation, in line with that agreement.

The UK Code of Practice for International Recruitment stipulates that health and social care employers and contracting bodies must provide candidates with the exact terms of the contract under which they will be working and any element which may differ pre- and post-professional registration such as salary, and any incentives and reclaim of advances must be clearly explained in writing.

NHS Employers has developed repayment clause guidance to support employers with reclaiming expenses from overseas recruits who chooses to leave the organisation. The guidance outlines how to deal with these situations fairly and with a maximum figure to reclaim if the organisation chooses to have a repayment clause.

The Department of Health and Social Care guidance on applying for health and social care jobs in the UK from abroad must be made available to a candidate at the earliest opportunity.

The essentials

What people resource do you have available to you?
What do you need?

Consider the upfront process costs, they can be significant but the ROI in the longer term means that it is a cheaper alternative to temporary agency costs.

What relocation package will you offer?
What will you pay for and what will be considered a loan to the recruit?

PASTORAL AND PROFESSIONAL SUPPORT

To be successful at attracting and retaining staff from overseas you will need to form a comprehensive plan for induction, pastoral and professional support. As their employer, you might be the only link to their new country of residence until they become more established, so it's important that enough resource and preparation is put into the pastoral and professional support your overseas staff will need.

Trusts should engage with overseas recruits early and often. This includes maintaining contact after a job offer is made but before they arrive to the UK. This could include virtual meetings and introductions with the line manager and other key colleagues they will be working with.

If you help your overseas staff settle in and establish themselves in the country, they'll be far more likely to stay.

Good practice example: dedicated resource for pastoral support

Whittington Health NHS Trust has a central administrator providing dedicated pastoral support for its overseas nursing recruits. The administrator is involved in all video interviews and gets to know each candidate, meeting every single one when they arrive in the UK and providing them with a welcome food pack and bedding. The administrator is there to help with any issues that arise for the staff no matter how small and will make sure that concerns or worries are identified and acted upon quickly.

Check out how University Hospitals Sussex NHS Foundation Trust continued its excellent pastoral care throughout COVID-19.

Recruit to retain

The first six months in a new role typically influences whether a recruit stays for the long term, making induction and early pastoral and professional support crucial. Integrating staff into your organisation and setting out what is expected in a clear and consistent way can help the settling-in process. Effective mentoring, understanding career progression at interview stage, professional support and a supportive learning environment will enable recruits to be as productive as possible in their roles.

See the Supporting international staff section of our Improving staff retention guide and our International retention toolkit.

Prepare for leavers

While your aim is to ensure your international recruits have the best possible experience and want to stay with your organisation, you must also be prepared for people to leave.

Some people can't adjust or settle, they might want to move to another part of the UK or perhaps only had plans to come and work for 12-18 months before returning home. Having good two-way communication channels may encourage staff to be open about their aims to help you with your planning. Leavers can also provide some vital feedback on how things can be improved. Are there mechanisms in place for them to provide feedback in an open and transparent way?

As an employer, consider having a transitional approach in place where you support potential leavers to move into different roles within the trust and therefore remaining within the organisation.

The essentials

You need to prepare and resource for the induction, pastoral and professional support your overseas staff will need.

Open communication with your overseas staff about their career aspirations is important, this will help workforce planning.

Be prepared for repatriation situations, have a plan in case it happens.

IMMIGRATION AND PROFESSIONAL REGISTRATION

During the planning stages, familiarise yourself with the immigration rules and the process for overseas recruits to obtain professional registration. There will be associated timescales for both processes to factor into your planning.

Immigration rules

UK Visas and Immigration \(UKVI\) is responsible for making decisions about who has the right to visit or stay in the country. If you are recruiting from overseas your organisation will need a sponsorship licence and the ability to issue certificates of sponsorship to overseas recruits.

See the UKVI guidance on applying for an employer's sponsor licence and employing people from outside the EEA.

Sponsorship responsibilities

On becoming a sponsor, the organisation must fulfil certain duties, such as record keeping and reporting in order to maintain the sponsorship licence. You will need to factor these duties into your resource requirements.

Read the full guidance on sponsor duties from UKVI.

Information on the sponsorship licence system, including changes planned as part of the UK Government's sponsorship road map, can be found on NHS Employers website. NHS Employers also have a quick guide on applying for certificates of sponsorship \(CoS\).

View NHS Employers webinar with Home Office that goes into detail on immigration queries, visas, and sponsorship.

Immigration routes and the new points-based immigration system

Under the points-based system, overseas candidates must pass a points assessment before they are given permission to enter or remain in the UK. Fixed and tradable points are awarded to reflect skill, salary and in some cases if the role on the immigration salary list.

See the NHS Employers quick guide to identify which immigration route the different professions currently fall under. Find guidance on new visa processes dedicated section of the NHS Employers website.

Employers should be aware of other immigration routes that provide the right to work without sponsorship, such as the British National (Overseas) Visa and the High Potential Individual (HPI) Visa. A list of other available visa types is available on the NHS employers website.

Over 2024, the UK government will be rolling out issuing evisas that will replace physical biometric residence permits (BRPs). Enhancements to the EU Settlement Scheme \(EUSS\) mean that from September 2023 people with pre-settled status will automatically have their status extended by two years before it expires.

In early 2024, the government implemented immigration policy changes including restricting care workers and senior care workers from bringing dependents with them when they migrate to the UK. The increase in salary thresholds also impacts those employed under a skilled worker and health and care visa when taking out a new application, renewing or extending their visa.

See the NHS Employers website for details on how the changes will impact the NHS.

Employing refugee healthcare professionals

The employment of refugee healthcare professionals brings many benefits for employers and helps NHS organisations to meet their requirements in workforce supply, equality and diversity, and corporate social responsibility.

A refugee is a person who has had a positive decision on their claim for asylum under the 1951 United Nations Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees \(the Refugee Convention\) and has been granted leave to remain in the UK. Refugees are forced to leave their countries due to fear of persecution, often because of direct state action.

The UK government launched a Displaced Talent Mobility Pilot in collaboration with Talent Beyond Boundaries pilot to aim, identify and address the administrative and legal barriers that refugees and other forcibly displaced job seekers face when seeking to move internationally as skilled workers.

Skilled refugees recruited in health and social care will continue to be recruited through the Health and Care Visa route of the points-based immigration system, where migrants are required to meet a particular level of skills and experience and employers are given sponsorship duties.

Considerations should be given to the specific pastoral care requirements of refugees and employers should be mindful of their needs.

Where possible trusts should connect with local authorities, including strategic migration partnerships, to understand the support available and reduce duplication.

NHS Employers has developed a helpful resource page for hiring refugees. RefuAid and Talent Beyond Boundaries are external organisations who are supporting many refugees with finding work in the UK.

The NHS Employers pre-employment check standards contain flexibilities that employers may exercise when an applicant is genuinely unable to present the documents as laid out in the standards. These are often applicants that are furthest from the jobs market, for example homeless people, people with learning disabilities, asylum seekers, refugees, and other forcibly displaced people.

Good practice example: widening participation and supporting the employment of refugee healthcare professionals

The charity Growing Points worked alongside Leeds Teaching Hospitals provides opportunities to local people living in more deprived areas to access employment within the NHS.

A package designed by the charity helped support applicants with their interview and induction processes to make it more accessible to those from refugee and asylum backgrounds. During the application process many applicants were matched to apprentice routes, however the trust found that some applicants didn't have the correct qualifications to be able to start in a clinical support role straight away. The lead nurse met with the applicants to prepare them for values-based recruitment activities and workshops. Following this, every applicant was guaranteed a job, subject to NHS employment checks. Applicants found the process to be beneficial and provided them with more confidence.

The trust has continued to see the benefits of geographically-targeted recruitment and have upscaled this to other parts of Leeds. They have seen an increase in applications from disadvantaged backgrounds, refugees and asylum seekers which reflects the diversity in the community in the surrounding areas of the hospitals.

Professional registration

Familiarise yourself with the registration process and associated timescales of the relevant professional regulator so you can factor this into your planning.

General Medical Council \(GMC\)

Nursing and Midwifery Council \(NMC\)

Health and Care Professions Council \(HCPC\)

General Pharmaceutical Council \(GPhC\)

General Dental Council \(GDC\)

General Optical Council \(GOC\)

General Osteopathic Council \(GOsC\)

General Chiropractic Council \(GCC\)

It is recommended that all organisations register with the accredited test centres to be able to verify candidates results. It is the responsibility of the employer to ensure that all evidence and certification provided is appropriately verified. Any results submitted by candidates should always be checked by the employer against the available online systems to verify the test results, before the overseas candidate travels to the UK.

Register for IELTS. Register for OET.

Also consider approaching the regulator early in the recruitment process, particularly if you are looking to recruit high numbers. Early insight on what upcoming registration demand is likely to be will help the regulator to manage capacity.

The essentials

Do you have a sponsorship licence with UK Visas and Immigration?

Have you considered resource needed for ongoing sponsorship duties in your plan?

Have you factored in the timescales for the registration processes into your planning?

Have you told the regulator about your plans for recruitment?

ETHICAL PRACTICES

During the planning stages, familiarise yourself with the World Health Organization Code of Practice on ethical international recruitment, available on the NHS Employers website. The latest update of the Code of Practice was published in March 2023. You can use the quick guide to understand what the Code of Practice means for employers, organisations, collaborations and candidates.

Planning and managing recruitment in an ethical way should be a priority for all organisations, because it is the right thing to do and because failure to do so is likely to impact on the reputation of the organisation and the NHS as an employer.

Best practice benchmarks

It is expected that all organisations will apply these best practice benchmarks.

Red and amber list countries

There are countries where you cannot undertake direct and targeted recruitment. This is because these countries are receiving government aid and the UK has made a commitment to support their developing health needs. There is nothing to prevent an individual from anywhere in the world applying for work in the NHS if they choose to do so, but employers and agencies must not proactively target these developing countries.

There are rare exceptions to this where government authorised exchange schemes may bring across staff from countries on the red or amber list, such as the Medical Training Initiative (MTI). This scheme is designed to allow a small number of doctors to enter the UK from overseas for a maximum of 24 months so that they can benefit from training and development in NHS services before returning to their home countries. This is primarily for the benefit of doctors from red or amber list countries.

- ✓ No active recruitment from countries on the red or amber list.
 - ✓ Employers will follow good recruitment practices, demonstrate a sound ethical approach, record international recruitment activities and respond appropriately to individual applications.
 - ✓ No fees charged in relation to gaining employment in the UK.
 - ✓ Appropriate information will be available about the role applied for.
 - ✓ Any repayment clause in an employment contract will be transparent, proportionate, timed, and flexible.

All international health and social care professionals:

- will have the appropriate level of English language
 - will have a level of knowledge and proficiency comparable to that expected of an individual trained in the UK
 - must be registered with the appropriate UK regulatory body
 - will be fully supported to undertake supervised practice as required
 - will undergo the occupational health assessment prior to commencing employment with additional screening tests where applicable
 - appropriate information about the post to be available to candidate's at an early stage so international health and social care personnel can make an informed decision on whether to accept a job offer
 - will have appropriate pre-employment checks undertaken for any criminal convictions or cautions as required by UK legislation
 - will have a valid visa before entering the UK
 - will be offered appropriate support and induction with pre-enrolment / placement preparation.
 - will have fair and just contractual practices.

Using recruitment agencies, organisations, or collaborations

If you choose to use a recruitment service provider, choose one on an approved framework. This will give you reassurance that recruiting processes adhere to all legal requirements and that you are getting the best value from a service. You should also check that the service provider you contract with is on the Code of Practice for International Recruitment, so you know its recruiting processes are ethical.

A list of providers that have declared they comply with the ethical code requirements is available on the NHS Employers website.

We also encourage employers to share with us any information relating to agencies who appear to be recruiting unethically or contravening the Code of Practice.

Research the target country

Find out if you need to take any additional steps to recruit an individual from the country you have decided to target, so you can factor this into your planning.

If you are working with a service provider or as part of a national recruitment programme they will be able to advise, but it is important to ask. It may be helpful talking to other organisations with experience of recruiting from that country, and the relevant embassy in the UK will also be a helpful source of advice and guidance.

You can also speak to those different nationalities in your existing workforce to gain knowledge on educational pathways and demand for NHS employment in certain countries.

Good practice example – research target country

Australian recruits form a vital part of the workforce at London Ambulance Service NHS Trust, but when they began planning recruitment they found that there wasn't an equivalent in Australia to the C1 test to drive an ambulance. This meant that those with experience of driving in Australia first needed to convert their normal driving licence (for which a permanent address was required), then complete the test and then the blue light training. Supporting recruits through the process has been important as it can be a stressful time, especially when some will be keen to get driving.

The essentials

Familiarise yourself with the World Health Organisation Code of Practice on ethical international recruitment.

No proactive recruitment is allowed from countries on the red or amber list and candidates must not be charged fees in relation to gaining employment in the UK.

If you choose to use a recruitment service provider, choose one on an approved framework.

Find out if you need to take any additional steps to recruit an individual from the country you have decided to target.

NHS Employers has created an FAQ webpage to help with queries referring to international recruitment and the code of practice.

EVALUATION PLANNING

During the planning stage of your international recruitment activity you will want to consider how you are going to evaluate the success of the process and impact of the activity. Continual improvement of any process requires ongoing evaluation and it is worthwhile building this into your recruitment activity from the beginning, considering what elements you want to regularly measure and how this can help improve your future activity.

Why evaluate?

Evaluating your international recruitment activity will help you to:

- demonstrate the value of international recruitment
- adjust your processes to ensure quality and efficiency
- identify and replicate good practice
- celebrate and share successes.

You should identify evaluation tasks at the outset and build them into your recruitment planning. There are many information sources for evaluation to consider:

- workforce data, eg retention figures, pre-employment drop outs, OSCE pass rates, agency spend etc
- website and social media statistics
- E-surveys
- telephone discussions/interviews
- informal feedback – have a system to record it
- stay and exit interviews
- at-event and post-event feedback
- workshop-type discussion or focus group with staff.

Evaluation typically involves these stages:

The essentials

Have you set clear recruitment objectives and targets?

Think about all the evaluation methods available to you.

Identify evaluation tasks at the outset and build them into your planning.

Use data in a smart way - start with what you already know or have easy access to.

Gather as much information as you can while the international recruitment campaign is running.

BUILDING A BUSINESS CASE

The upfront cost of recruiting from overseas is significant, and this can be a barrier. However, the return on investment in the longer term means that it is a cheaper alternative to temporary agency costs. Your finance executives will be looking for evidence of this when you are seeking approval for your international recruitment activity.

Based on research from the Nuffield Trust, it takes between six months and two and a half years to see return on investment for an international nurse. Upfront recruitment costs need to be considered in the context of national funding opportunities and the longer-term or alternative routes to increase nurse numbers.

What to include

Your business case must be robust. It needs to clearly state your supply issues, your overall workforce supply plan and how you anticipate international recruitment supporting it.

Other elements to include:

- ✓ The numbers and skills needed.
- ✓ Anticipated timescales.
- ✓ The people resource you'll need from within the trust – HR, clinical and pastoral.
- ✓ The upfront costs and your return on investment analysis.
- ✓ How you are going to coordinate the activity / your delivery model.
- ✓ What your relocation package will be.
- ✓ The type of pastoral and professional support you will put in place – pre-employment, induction and beyond.
- ✓ How you will ensure ethical practices.
- ✓ How you will engage with your current staff to build support and help the integration.
- ✓ How you plan to evaluate your campaign, to inform further international recruitment.

The international recruitment network hosted by NHS Employers. Is an opportunity for those working in international recruitment to keep in touch with the latest developments, and it is a safe environment to share current experiences and best practices, and network with colleagues working across the NHS.

By joining the IRN you will:

- Have access to our bi-monthly network meetings.
- Be a key contact to receive invitations, such as to participate in consultations or feedback on information you are experiencing in the system.

Good practice example – preparing a business case

King's College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust has shared top tips on how to put together a robust business case:

- Give context of shortages at both a national level and within your organisation. Key management information to include is your current vacancy rate for the staff group you are looking to recruit to from overseas, as well as the current vacancy rate of the band you are recruiting to.
- You might wish to explain what other organisations have done in the international recruitment space and their successes. King's, for instance, embarked on a plan to bring approximately 400 international nurses each year for three years, which resulted in them having the lowest nurse vacancy rate at band 5 in the country.
- Share details of your current agency spend, and any cost savings to be made here. You should also emphasise the operational challenges of being reliant on temporary rather than substantive staff.
- Be clear about costs. Being as upfront as possible will prevent surprises down the line.
- Highlight the due diligence you will undertake when contracting with recruitment providers (if this is the model you are following). Outline their experience of delivery and previous track record in your selected countries.
- You may wish to explain alternative options to international recruitment, emphasising its potential benefits over them.

Do nothing

NHS shortages are national and therefore doing nothing will result in ongoing agency spend and high vacancy rates.

Offer recruitment and retention premia and recruit nationally

You could argue that this might be effective, but organisations across the NHS are also looking to increase their domestic supply and we want to emphasise collaboration not competition. This could simply drive up costs for yourself and other organisations if it becomes a challenge around who pays more.

International recruitment

Highlight potential volume, supplementing current recruitment practices. Show successes at other organisations and what regions they've recruited from, and various options.

Finally, you may also consider working with your finance team to help model the up-front investment against reduced premium bank and agency over a period of three to five years. That will help you in your business case to identify break-even dates and also where the organisation will be saving money.

PREPARING FOR RECRUITMENT

MARKETING YOUR ORGANISATION

Marketing your organisation to generate interest from potential candidates must be a priority in the early preparation for international recruitment and should become an ongoing activity. Recruitment is not only about filling a vacant position(s) but about building a brand and reputation for your organisation.

Attracting staff in a competitive environment can feel challenging. The NHS Employers Inspire, attract and recruit toolkit contains ideas about a range of attraction methods, with resources and good practice examples for your domestic and international recruitment activity.

Word of mouth is a particularly valuable promotional channel among overseas communities, so ensure your existing staff have a great recruitment and employment experience and encourage them to spread the word about your organisation and the NHS.

This is a great opportunity to discuss with your existing international recruits why they chose to move to the UK and how their expectations have measured up against the reality. Being able to share positive experiences and case studies will be a powerful marketing tool for your trust.

The International Recruitment We are the NHS campaign

Part of NHS England's We Are the NHS campaign focuses on international recruitment.

Resources include a core set of marketing materials aimed at individuals who are registered as a nurse overseas (in those countries that can be ethically recruited from) looking to work outside of their own country.

The materials provide a high-quality summary of the NHS offer to international nurses, maximising the NHS brand, and give practical information on how nurses can apply.

Campaign materials are freely available to all NHS organisations, or those working on their behalf including approved recruitment agencies on the Code of Practice, via the campaign resource centre.

If NHS trusts want to share the campaign materials with an agency to support their international recruitment, you should ensure the recruitment agency or sub-contracted agency trading name appears on our Ethical Recruiters List or ask to see the agency's confirmation letter or email from NHS Employers. Trusts should also ensure agencies are aware of their obligations to not recruit from red or amber list countries, and that agencies should not be facilitating the recruitment of staff from red or amber list countries, in line with the Code.

Employer of choice

To attract talented candidates from overseas, you need to be able to separate your organisation and region from the rest, and separate NHS employment from health systems in competing countries. Jobseekers are no different to any other consumer, they are looking for the best deal. This means different things for different people, so it is important to think about your audience and what will be a priority for candidates coming from overseas.

From a good reputation and culture, a strong pastoral and professional support package, to communicating your relocation package, individuals need to understand what is available to them both within the organisation and in the local area. But make sure you give candidates realistic expectations of the role and the location to reduce the likelihood of them leaving the organisation in the first few months.

The essentials

Is there more that can be done to improve the reputation of your organisation?

What do prospective overseas candidates think of your organisation at interview?

What do staff get in other organisations that might be missing from yours?

Have you analysed the data from your stay and exit conversations recently?

Do you have opportunities to coordinate promotional activity across your local health system?

NHS England has produced a de-biasing toolkit aimed at supporting employers on how bias exists within the recruitment process and how they can take action to reduce and eliminate bias. This is a great opportunity to discuss with your existing international recruits why they chose to move to the UK and how their expectations have measured up against the reality. Being able to share positive experiences and case studies will be a powerful marketing tool for your trust.

Good practice example – promotional resources

Newcastle Upon Tyne Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust produced a promotional video featuring some of its overseas staff. Prospective candidates can hear about the support they've received, the roles they've taken on within the organisation, their experience of the local area, how they've settled and their impression of the city.

The Big Thank You – Employee engagement at King's College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust

To attract people to health care assistant (HCA) and nursing roles, the team at King's College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust worked with a recruitment advertising agency to develop an internal campaign to thank staff and show support from non-clinical senior leadership.

The trust engaged existing staff to develop the Place to Push Yourself campaign which highlighted the organisation's values, recognised the importance of these roles, and showcased the trust as a place to grow.

The trust filmed and photographed staff across a range of roles and a video and a series of art installations were put in place across the organisation to showcase staff and thank them for all the work they do. The campaign has been very well received internally, and the trust will be making additional installations to launch an external recruitment campaign and highlight more roles such as midwives. The campaign also won the 2021 RAD award for employee engagement.

For international recruitment, the trust has been working with King's Commercial to support the recruitment of 400 international nurses in 2021/2022. The trust prioritised ensuring all recruitment campaigns encompass the five guiding principles of the Code of Practice, and focused on providing dedicated professional and pastoral support to ensure they are aware of the NHS structure and life in the UK. This includes practical and financial accommodation support, linking in with other nationals as a supportive network, learning and development plans, and an overview by the BAME network and EDI teams.

ENGAGING EXISTING STAFF

Engage with your current staff early to build support for the recruitment activity. Integration between existing staff and new overseas recruits is strongest when you involve your existing staff as much as possible from the start of the process. When your new recruits arrive, a social event can be a nice way to help your existing staff and new recruits to get to know each other.

Overseas staff will be used to different English terminology and cultural norms. It is important for existing staff to understand this and where possible undertake learning about the cultures of their colleagues.

It is important that you help existing staff to understand the need for international recruitment and support them through the changes that might be needed to their working environment and ways of working, particularly if your organisation is recruiting from overseas for the first time.

The essentials

Engaging early with your current staff is important to build support for the recruitment activity.

A social event can be a good way to help your existing staff and new recruits to get to know each other.

Your existing staff might need support through changes to the working environment and their ways of working.

Good practice example: Supporting the nurse journey sessions and engaging existing staff

At the beginning of 2020, Nottingham University Hospitals NHS Trust wanted to increase its overseas nurse supply. However, the COVID-19 pandemic began to take hold which resulted in the trust supporting nurses to join the temporary register until they were able to take the Test of Competence. This provided a valuable opportunity to speak with nurses to understand their recruitment journey to Nottingham. All the lessons learned over the summer of 2020 were turned into virtual learning sessions by the international recruitment team as an education resource for ward teams, clinical educators and recruitment leads.

Supporting the Journey sessions, created by the Institute of Care Excellence international nursing team are aimed at anyone who works alongside the recruitment of international nurses and to encourage existing staff to be engaged in the planning and support of overseas cohorts.

The sessions detail the process of recruitment through the trusts three main streams: agencies, direct applicants, and healthcare assistant progression. The sessions, held over Microsoft Teams, also provide information on:

- financial investment and implications of international recruitment
- pre-arrival support needed, such as regular emails and the creation of personal infographics so incoming and existing staff can start to know each other the Test of Competence
- language competency questions (OET)
- nurses that have gone through this process.

The programme also focuses on the pastoral support needed for overseas nurses and the understanding of the personal sacrifices made by leaving their home country.

The team believes the keys to success were to have the desire to understand other cultures, be flexible and adapt their plans as situations change, and involve both newly recruited nurses as well as those who have gone through the process before.

Best practice benchmarks

- ✓ Conduct an introductory engagement activity with the teams who will be welcoming international recruits, to help staff feel involved.
- ✓ For example, asking them to contribute to the induction planning.
- ✓ Make sure you provide clear communication of the agreed organisational objectives and reasons for international recruitment.
- ✓ Ensure communication and feedback channels are made available so staff at all levels have ways to raise concerns or discuss anxieties.
- ✓ Ensure strong and consistent messaging from the leadership team throughout planning, recruitment and arrival of international recruits.
- ✓ Continue the dialogue over time so that teams stay engaged and up to date with the recruitment process and continue to see the benefits to them.
- ✓ Ensure you provide your existing staff and new recruits with informal opportunities to get to know each other.
- ✓ Identify and deal with dissatisfaction proactively, through exploring and identifying the source and focusing on solutions.

Good practice example: Foster ward programme

At East Kent University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust

internationally educated nurses (IENs) are allocated to one of five wards on each of their three acute hospital sites within the general and specialist medicine (GSM) care group.

Known as foster wards, these wards have established a reputation in terms of staff morale, inclusion, and support system for student nurses. IENs spend six to eight weeks on the foster wards to gain clinical experience while completing their OSCE training. While IENs are in quarantine, virtual meetings with the ward teams allow for improved communication around specific information and help to ease new staff into their first clinical shifts.

Enabling IENs to feel comfortable speaking up is a key focus of the programme. Calls and engagement activities now include overseas staff who have gone through the programme to act as a buddy/liaison and help with transition into the ward, and the team has also set up a dedicated WhatsApp group to act as a safe space to share feelings.

Ward managers assistants are included in communications from the start and ensure continuity by following up with emails and telephone calls, which is essential to maintain relationships and build the reputation of the trust. Ward teams are also involved throughout the recruitment process, including interviewing and induction days, which develops the sense of belonging within the team.

From March 2021 – November 2021, on its ninth cohort, 95 overseas nurses have gone through or are currently in the foster ward programme. The chief executive visited the foster wards and wrote about them in a weekly blog to share the success of the programme which boosted and refreshed staff morale.

USING A RECRUITMENT AGENCY OR SERVICE

If you choose to use a recruitment service provider to help with your international campaign activity, your early preparation will involve procurement and contracting.

There are benefits to using the services of an expert, particularly if your organisation has not done international recruitment before. You will need to factor in the additional fees for the service and make sure you are clear about each other's responsibilities in the process for the working relationship to be successful.

NHS England has approved several public framework agreements to provide international recruitment services on behalf of NHS providers in England. Frameworks are designed to act as a support network to NHS providers to ensure that contracts entered into are compliant to Public Contract Regulations 2015 and are protected by robust terms, high quality services and support value for money. The approved frameworks are free to access for NHS providers giving an enhanced level of governance and assurance to support ethical recruitment requirements and the successful placement of healthcare professionals.

Generally, framework agreements are procured for a term between two and four years and can offer direct award or further competition options for providers to contract one or more suppliers for a period of up to four years. While approved frameworks will not routinely add in new suppliers following conclusion of the tender process, there may be sub-contracting opportunities available subject to the specific terms outlined by the framework providers. New tender opportunities will be publicly advertised tendered through the Find a Tender service, or you can access full details for all approved frameworks.

All NHS providers are strongly recommended to engage with an approved framework to call-off any requirements for the international recruitment of healthcare professionals. Each framework agreement will have its own unique terms, specification, commercial structure and added value benefits, so please engage with the relevant parties to ensure that you get the support you need to support your project and successful outcomes.

NHS England is working with agency framework operators the Workforce Alliance (a joint collaboration of NHS Procurement in Partnership and Crown Commercial Service), and Healthtrust Europe.

Healthtrust Europe (HTE) is a procurement solutions partner for public and private health and care providers, helping them to source the best value products and services to deliver excellent patient care. HTE's solutions are patientcentred and clinically led, driving quality, safety, service and price for partner organisations.

HTE works in partnership with providers to develop contract solutions that support workforce resourcing strategies; including reducing reliance on agency staff with strategic procurement activities across rostering, workforce tech, bank, agency staff, permanent and international recruitment agreements.

NHS Workforce Alliance specialises in the health workforce category, including international recruitment. It can provide you with personal, specialised, expert advice, to support you in delivering quality and compliant international recruitment requirements:

- It is able to provide advice on the appropriate and ethical route to market, which will help you achieve outcomes and commercial benefits. It can even support your call off processes for direct awards or further competitions.
- They gather detailed management information at framework level. This enables a strategic view of the market, and allows them to foresee emerging trends and challenges on the horizon, which allows them to provide tailored support for your trust.
- Their framework and market datasets enable them to support trusts with benchmarking and insight data.
- Because it works in partnership with trusts across the NHS, it is perfectly positioned to support individual trust as well as in collaboration and cluster working.

Contracting

The number of people you are looking to recruit will determine the procurement or tendering exercise you will need to go through. Whatever the number, you will need to draw up a clear specification and have up-to-date job descriptions. Most organisations that use recruitment services agree a fixed rate for each person that is successfully recruited. The costs can vary depending on volume and the services you require.

Good practice example – choosing the right recruitment agency or service

You are likely to work closely with your chosen recruitment agency or service for some time, and the success of your programme is likely to be affected by that relationship working well. There are therefore significant benefits to be achieved by planning for time to test the market and appoint the right organisation, such as:

- Appointing a partner who understands your particular situation, and can tailor an offering to get you the best result.
- Tailoring your specification and requirement in order to reflect the exact mix and level of service that you require.
- Driving the market in order to achieve the optimum mix of cheapest fee and highest quality standard.
- Forging a relationship with a partner who will 'buy-in' to what you are trying to do, and support your programme on an ongoing basis. This could include providing ongoing advice and support around how to support your recruits once they have arrived, which will be key to worker retention.

NHS Workforce Alliance is able to support you in awarding a contract to the right International Recruitment agency or service, and can offer advice and support on your direct award of further competition process.

Good practice example – drawing up a contract

Surrey and Sussex Healthcare NHS Trust, University Hospital Southampton NHS Foundation Trust and York Teaching Hospital NHS Foundation Trust share some top tips for contracting.

Things to set out in your contractual agreement.

- Set clear expectations, such as being specific about expected numbers of recruits and cohort size.
- Set timescales for the process and when you should expect to see your candidates arrive.
- Outline who is responsible for each element of the process, for instance, if the service provider will meet and greet staff at the airport, make sure it's written down and clear in the contract. Verbal assurances may not be sufficient.
- Who is paying for what, and at what stage? Ensure all the expected elements and costs are included so both parties understand their commitment. This will require close working with your procurement team as well as your finance team, so you can make any ongoing payments on time. Ensuring you have sufficient credit on the corporate credit card to pay fees promptly is something you might not think about, and you may need to organise multiple cards to ensure you do not reach spending limits.
- Detail caps on costs where this is applicable, for example you will cover costs of flights up to £800 and no further.
- Define a rebate period of the recruitment fee should a candidate leave within a certain time period.
- Identify your agreed communication channels, specifying who will work with whom on a daily basis and a schedule of regular review dates.
- Be clear on how performance will be managed, and what information the service provider will give you and when. Also request a weekly progress report so you are kept informed.
- State who has the final say in offering employment.

Ethical practices

If you decide to use the services of a recruitment service provider, choose one on an approved framework. This will give you reassurance that their recruiting processes adhere to all legal requirements and that you are getting the best value from their service. You should also check that the provider you contract with is on the Ethical Recruiters List every time you use their services. NHS Employers updates the Ethical Recruiters List regularly and this is so you know their recruiting processes are ethical.

A list of service providers who have declared they comply with the ethical code requirements is available on the NHS Employers website.

The revised Code of Practice was released in March 2023. You can use the quick guide to understand what the Code of Practice means for employers, agencies, organisations, collaborations, and candidates.

Best practice benchmarks

These best practice benchmarks will help to ensure you build an effective working relationship with your chosen service provider.

The essentials

If you decide to use the services of a recruitment provider, choose one on an approved framework. You may wish to get references from trusts who have worked with the provider previously.

To have a successful working relationship, make sure you are clear about each other's responsibilities in the process.

Ensure you have a dedicated contact at your organisation who can liaise with the service provider.

Make sure that the recruitment provider you use is on the Ethical Recruiters List. This should be checked each time you begin a new recruitment process.

Schedule regular management meetings to review progress against your contract arrangements.

- ✓ Have a dedicated contact at your organisation who can liaise with the service provider and your recruiting managers, and schedule regular management meetings to review progress against your contract arrangements. Having a detailed project plan may help with this.
- ✓ Choose a provider on an approved framework. This will give you reassurance that their recruiting processes adhere to all legal requirements and that you are getting the best value from their service.
- ✓ At the start of each recruitment process check that your provider of choice is still on the Ethical Recruiters List.

- ✓ Have clear arrangements in place about what the service provider's responsibilities are for employment screening.

Your contract agreement should outline:

- the types and levels of checks required for different posts
- that the service provider will be liable if it is discovered that any staff have not been adequately screened
- that you retain the right to audit the service provider's screening process at any time.

- ✓ Decide if you might want the service provider to undertake the initial sift of candidate applications. You may also want them to ask potential candidates to undertake a range of tests or activities to assess values and competence.
- ✓ Don't get caught out by judgement calls. If you want the service provider to make judgements about the candidate's suitability during screening checks, you should ensure that such judgements follow agreed decision-making guidelines.
- ✓ Fair and just contractual practices must be observed by recruiters, contracting bodies and employers in the employment of international health and care personnel.
- ✓ As part of your agreement, be clear about who will be liaising with the new recruits between the offer of employment and their relocation.
- ✓ Include a contractual statement in the service agreement about the point of payment. For example, you might want to stipulate that the service provider will not receive payment for their services until staff arrive in the UK.
- ✓ Ask the service provider to provide you with references from other organisations they have worked with and from candidates they have deployed. Follow these up directly to find out what their experience has been.

RECRUITING

INTERVIEW AND SELECTION

International recruitment, like domestic recruitment, needs to centre around a positive candidate experience. It needs to be an engaging process and one which motivates candidates to continue with their application, especially because the process of UK immigration and registration can take time. You want to avoid candidates dropping out of the process or accepting a job offer from another organisation.

Interviewing has evolved over the years and employers are using a variety of methods to make the process quicker, easier, more accessible and more varied, all of which enhance the candidate experience. Consider if you want to ask candidates to undertake tests or activities that are both values and competence related as part of the selection process. Effective recruitment decisions are more likely when a range of selection methods are used in addition to interview questions. For example, evidence about a person's suitability for a role can also be gathered from skills testing, a written exercise or work-based scenarios.

Advertisements

It is important to consider the way job advertisements are structured, the information they include, where and how they are advertised.

The International Recruitment We are the NHS campaign provides a high-quality summary of the NHS offer to international nurses, maximising the NHS brand, and gives practical information on how nurses can apply.

Job advertisements need to be inclusive and include information on recruiting manager details, state that international applications are welcome, how candidates could liaise with regulatory bodies such as the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC), and information on visa related requirements.

These details are especially important to include for direct applications from the list of red and amber list countries on the Code of Practice.

Pre-employment health checks with additional screenings may be required depending on the applicants country of origin, vaccination status or existing health conditions.

Pre-placement forms can be useful as they can provide clearance or suggest extra screening recommendations depending on which area the applicant will be deployed. Using these tools can help the organisation know if the applicant requires any adjustments for health condition.

The list doesn't prevent individual health and social care personnel from independently applying to health and social care employers for employment in the UK, of their own accord and without being targeted by a third party, such as a recruitment agency or employer.

Technology vs face-to-face

To manage the international recruitment interview process in a resourceful way, some organisations are choosing to carry out video interviews using technology such as Skype or FaceTime. In some cases, pre-recorded interview questions are used, which allow individuals to be interviewed at a time that suits them.

Other organisations prefer to send a team of experienced recruiters and clinical staff to conduct the selection process face-to-face in the candidate's home country. This can demonstrate your dedication to the process, help to build connection with candidates and to help them feel more comfortable about your organisation. However, this is a decision for you to make locally, having weighed up the pros and cons.

NHS Employers guidance on virtual recruitment is designed to support employers, recruiting managers and interview panels to recruit effectively, remotely. It provides questions to consider at each stage of the process, to help ensure a good candidate experience that maintains the principles of your recruitment process and organisational values.

Good practice example – using video-based interviewing

University Hospital Southampton NHS Foundation Trust has experience of both interviewing in-country and using video platforms to interview and recruit abroad. The trust has found video interviewing to be the preferred model, here are a few of the benefits outlined:

- Consistent supply, with the pipeline much more staggered as opposed to making 200 offers following interviews in-country.
- Very efficient interviewing days, being able to quickly move between Skype interviews.
- Less clinician time out of hospital.
- No upfront costs, such as travel or accommodation.
- Guaranteed return on investment.

Southampton uses Skype or FaceTime when hiring directly, while the agency has a specialist video interviewing platform which is more reliable. Be aware that some platforms like Skype may not be available in certain countries, so plan accordingly and test your software if necessary. However, video-based recruiting may not be right for your organisation and you may prefer to be in country as part of the recruitment process.

Values-based recruitment

Values-based recruitment (VBR) is an approach to help attract and select future staff whose personal values and behaviours align with the NHS values outlined in the NHS Constitution. Assessing values across different cultures should form an important part of the selection process for international recruitment.

How to incorporate values and competence into the interview process

- ✓ Group activity to assess values and teamwork, for example discussing a patient care plan.
- ✓ Skills assessment to ensure competency, such as drug calculation tests.
- ✓ Values-based interview, for example asking candidates to describe times when they have demonstrated your organisation's values.

Good practice example – Post-pandemic in-country recruitment events: what's changed?

The CapitalNurse International Recruitment Consortium held its first in-country recruitment event since the start of the pandemic. The hybrid in-person and virtual approach launched a campaign for both mental health and adult nurses in Trinidad. A key element was sharing cases of overseas nurses who are now in senior roles, and presentations to candidates that covered the relocation package, NHS benefits and pay, as well as a recruitment video. These were very popular with potential recruits and contributed to CapitalNurse being an employer of choice. During the three day campaign, using a combination of face-to-face and virtual interviews supported by the in country team, over 65 nurses were appointed.

NHS Employers has guidance that answers questions about your responsibilities as a sponsor of migrant workers and guidance about avoiding discrimination.

The essentials

Will you conduct interviews via Skype/video technology or send a recruiting panel to conduct them face-to-face?

Consider if you want to ask candidates to undertake tests or activities that are both values and competence related as part of the selection process.

Does your organisation recruit for values domestically? If so, the same principles can be applied to international recruitment.

If you are working with a recruitment service provider, they can undertake an initial sift of applications or CVs before your recruiter's interview.

LANGUAGE ASSESSMENTS

Employing organisations are responsible for ensuring that everyone involved in the delivery of services has the required level of English language competence to enable them to communicate effectively with patients and colleagues.

Identifying English language competency prior to offering an appointment helps to ensure protection for patients, employing organisations, and employees. While English language competence testing does not establish an individual's aptitude for effective communication, it can help to provide a useful tool to build on.

When appointing individuals who are already registered with a professional regulatory body, you can usually be assured that they will have the minimum standard of communication set by that body. Each of the professional regulators has guidance on the way applicants can demonstrate language competency when registering with them.

However, when carrying out overseas recruitment activity you will likely be making the selection decision subject to a candidate obtaining professional registration.

English language tests can sometimes be a tricky hurdle for overseas recruits during the registration process. Some organisations will choose to make it a requirement for overseas candidates to have passed their English tests prior to the interview, so they have assurance that passing the test will not be a problem later in the registration process. Other organisations choose not to make it a requirement and will offer language support to prepare for the individual for the test. This approach produces a much larger pool of candidates, however it is a decision to consider locally.

Achieving the required level

The required level of language proficiency across all professions is high, and candidates may need significant support to reach the expected International English Language Testing System (IELTS) or Occupational English Test (OET) level.

Listen to the NHS Employers webinar around language testing and how to identify fraudulent pre-employment documentation.

Options for support

1. Benchmarking a candidate's ability/mock testing

Understanding your candidate's language level early in the recruitment process can help ensure you put appropriate support in place; for example, it would not be appropriate to use materials designed to move a candidate on to IELTS level 7.0 if they are at level 4.0 with a basic level of English.

2. Online courses and in-country preparation programmes or tutoring

If you decide to use third party support to help candidates reach the required level, it's important to research the support available. Many tutoring services supporting with IELTS are geared to supporting candidates reach a level of English for entrance into schools or university. Ensuring candidates are accessing material to achieve the level required to register with their regulator is crucial. More information on the required standard is available in sections on recruiting nurses and doctors.

There is an accredited preparation providers list for OET. Premium providers on the list have demonstrated that their courses help candidates reach their targeted OET score.

3. Encouraging focus on marking criteria

It is important that support is focused around the criteria. While a candidate might appear to have strong English through the interview process, it may be that they are unable to meet the required standard in one of the areas (writing, listening, reading or speaking) in a pressurised test environment. Further information is available on the marking criteria from both IELTS and OET. It may also be helpful to source example answers online.

4. Changes to English Language Requirements

Since 2023 the NMC is accepting additional supporting information from employers \(SIFE\) when: an individual misses out on a score in one of the four domains by 0.5 in the IELTS (6 for writing and 6.5 in the other domains) or half a grade in the OET (C / 250 or above in writing and C+ / 300 or above in the other domains); or they were trained and assessed in a country where English is not a majority spoken language, and who have been working for at least one year in a non-registered role in a health and social care setting in the UK.

More information on these changes and next steps can be found on the NMC website.

Language competency

When appointing individuals who are registered with a professional regulatory body, employers can, in most cases, be assured that the individuals will have acquired the minimum standards set by that body. This will include their required level of English competency for their profession, where this is appropriate. This assurance should be obtained by undertaking the necessary checks with the relevant professional regulatory body as outlined in the NHS Employment Check Standards.

While this gives a certain level of assurance for registered healthcare workers from outside the UK, employers still have a duty to assure themselves that all individuals have the appropriate level of English competency to carry out the specific role they are being appointed to do. This duty is further reinforced by Part 7 of the Immigration Act, which stipulates employers must ensure that everyone involved in the delivery of NHS services has the required level of English language competency to deliver safe patient care.

Under normal circumstances, any measure of language competency should be assessed through the individual's application or as part of the interview process. Where seeking assurance as part of the individual's application, any assessment will need to consider any evidence provided by the applicant to demonstrate that they:

- ✓ have passed an English language competency test
 - ✓ hold a degree or relevant qualification that was taught in English by a recognised institution abroad
 - ✓ have lived in a multi-lingual household where a relative or carer used English as their primary form of communication
 - ✓ are a national from a majority English speaking country
 - ✓ have worked in an organisation/institution where English was their primary language
 - ✓ have pursued part of their education in the UK.

The person specification and selection process

Under the NHS Employment Check Standards employers are required to seek the necessary assurance of any qualifications that are relevant to the role being appointed to.

In accordance with good recruitment practise, the inclusion of any language competency requirements should be made clear in the person specification for the role being appointed to. As alluded to earlier, individuals can demonstrate their level of language competency in a variety of ways, therefore the person specification should reflect what equivalent assessment can be accepted where individuals have not carried out an appropriate test.

If requiring individuals to undergo a language competency assessment as part of the recruitment process, employers must ensure that all job applicants are treated in the same way at each stage of the recruitment process, to ensure they remain compliant with anti-discrimination laws.

Good practice example – language support

If the decision is made to support candidates, it's important to consider the type of support offered. Taking the tests can be challenging and stressful for candidates, and even those who have demonstrated good English at interview stage may not necessarily be well placed to pass the IELTS/OET test.

One way to mitigate this is to conduct mock tests early in the recruitment process, which is something Aneurin Bevan University Health Board has undertaken. The board found that some candidates were taking several years to get to the required level for registration, so understanding a candidate's current language competency and setting realistic expectations is important. Benchmarking through mock tests also ensures that the language learning programme you put in place can be adjusted to their individual needs.

Candidates may also have existing IELTS or OET results that could be used to assess current language competency.

English language test results

If a candidate provides evidence of an English language competency test, it is advised you use the available online systems provided by the relevant accredited body to verify the results. IELTS results can be verified by registering for their free online checking system. OET results can be verified via a similar system but the individual must give the prospective employer permission to verify the results through their OET account. The employer must also be registered to access the OET results verification portal. More information on professional employment checks is available on the NHS Employers website.

Seeking assurance of compliance

Employers may wish to consider the following steps to ensure their recruitment and ongoing practises to seek assurance of a person's language competency as fully compliant with employment check requirements, immigration, equality, and human rights law:

- ✓ assigning a nominated HR officer to look at their recruitment systems, job descriptions and person specification to ensure requirements are clear, fair and consistently applied
 - ✓ setting up a small group of recruiting managers, HR and staff side to look at selecting the evaluation methods required for certain roles and to determine appropriate test levels
 - ✓ looking at this systematically working with staff side to ensure requirements remain fair and justifiable
 - ✓ considering working with overseas recruitment agencies to explore scope to pre-assess a candidate's English language capabilities
 - ✓ exploring options to offer new starter a programme of social adaptation to enhance English language levels – particularly on areas such as typical ward dialect (eg nil by mouth)
 - ✓ incorporating information about language competency assessment in the recruitment and selection training programme
 - ✓ reviewing language competency levels and evaluation methods annually to ensure that they meet legal requirements and the relevant minimum competency frameworks.

EEA nationals (including Swiss nationals and individuals with European Community rights)

Following the end of the European Union transition period on 31 December 2020, the Department of Health and Social Care has been working with professional regulatory bodies to review registration arrangements for applications from holders of EEA qualifications. A report was published on 29th June 2023 confirming that EEA professional qualifications will continue to be recognised under standstill arrangements for a temporary period of five years. The Department will determine whether to carry out a further review of the operation of the standstill provisions in 5 years' time, as part of its wider programme of regulatory reform.

As such, UK healthcare professional regulators will continue to recognise EEA qualifications listed in the EU Directive as evidence of skills, knowledge and experience regardless of the individual's country of origin for a temporary period of five years from 29th June 2023.

Different arrangements are in place for Swiss nationals, who benefit from a four year grace period from 01 January 2021 during which they will be treated in the same way as pre 31/12/2020 EEA individuals based on their nationality, not their place of qualification.

The Chartered Society of Physiotherapy, the Royal College of Midwives, and the Society of Radiographers in partnership have developed a guide on supporting international recruitment.

This includes topics on:

- advertising roles
- interviewing and appointment
- professional development.

POST SELECTION AND PRE-EMPLOYMENT

Depending on what you have agreed to provide for your new recruits for their relocation, there may be tasks for the coordinator at this point such as flights, accommodation, pulling together welcome packs and confirming arrangements for induction.

Maintaining contact

During the period between offer of employment and relocation to the UK, it is important that you maintain regular contact with your new recruits. You should make every effort to reduce the risk of a candidate dropping out of the process or accepting a job offer from another organisation.

Technology, like Microsoft Teams and FaceTime along with social media platforms, make it much easier to stay in touch. You can use these communication channels to give regular updates, send tips and advice for relocation, share photos and news about your organisation and local area, start discussion groups and invite questions from your new recruits.

Information on maintaining contact is available in the international retention toolkit; section: creating strong foundations.

Good practice example – maintaining contact

Sheffield Teaching Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust has a closed Facebook group which they encourage newly recruited staff to use in the period between employment offer and starting at the trust. The trust shares updates, ranging from what's happening in the organisation to what the weather's like. It has also recorded and shared videos with existing staff saying they are looking forward to meeting the new recruits and have allowed current staff to post on the board, including those who have been through the transition of moving to the UK and can provide practical and emotional support.

Good practice example – health questionnaire

Norfolk and Norwich University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust has created an occupational health questionnaire for overseas recruits to complete prior to arrival. This helps the organisation find out what vaccinations new recruits have had, what additional screenings are required prior to arrival, and how they can support them with adjustments on arrival and deployment, if they have any existing health conditions.

NHS Employers has developed an e-learning tool hosted by NHS England to support employers increase understanding and confidence to make safe recruitment and employment decisions locally.

Progressing regulatory and immigration processes

Make clear what is expected of candidates throughout the process. Your new recruits will be responsible for progressing the UK regulatory and immigration processes. Continue to communicate with them, make sure they are clear about the process and motivate them at appropriate stages so you can avoid unnecessary delays.

Each of the professional regulators have guidance that you can use to explain the process to your recruits.

General Medical Council \(GMC\)

Nursing and Midwifery Council \(NMC\)

Health and Care Professions Council \(HCPC\)

General Pharmaceutical Council \(GPhC\)

General Dental Council \(GDC\)

General Optical Council \(GOC\)

General Osteopathic Council \(GOsC\)

General Chiropractic Council \(GCC\)

Employment checks

The NHS pre-employment checks standards will also be an essential part of the process at this point. NHS Employers provides practical information, toolkits and resources to support you with these checks.

Pay particular attention to the application process for criminal records checks or Certificates of Good Character for someone from overseas. For advice on who can apply, how to apply and contact details for criminal record checks overseas, see Home Office guidance.

The NHS Counter Fraud Authority \(NHSCFA\) is a special health authority tasked to lead the fight against fraud, bribery and corruption in the NHS. They are independent from other NHS bodies, report directly to the Department of Health and Social Care, and can be contacted at any time to report cases of potential fraud.

The essentials

During the period between the offer of employment and relocation to the UK it is important that you maintain regular contact with your new recruits.

Have you considered using technology like Skype, Microsoft Teams and Facetime to maintain contact with candidates?

If you are working with a recruitment service provider, do you have clear arrangements about who will be liaising with the new recruits between the offer of employment and the relocation?

Make sure candidates are clear about the process and know what their responsibilities are during every stage.

INDUCTION AND BEYOND

WELCOME AND INDUCTION

Given the value of staff from overseas and the high costs of running a recruitment campaign and relocation, a successful induction process and ongoing pastoral and professional support is of the utmost importance.

As their employer or lead recruiter, you will likely be the only link to the UK until they become more established, so it's important you help your recruits settle in and establish themselves, they'll be far more likely to stay.

Designing an induction programme

Your organisation and those that you work with will already have a well-established corporate induction programme, but it is worth considering what additional support or information might be beneficial for your overseas staff. For example, introducing a programme of social adaptation will help your overseas staff to learn about the NHS and the cultural and working differences. A programme like this will also enhance English language levels, particularly on areas such as typical ward dialect and phrases.

International recruits may be with the NHS for short period or for their whole career. It is important to showcase the variety of benefits they receive for working in the NHS, such as the NHS Pension Scheme. The scheme is one of the most generous in the UK and supports staff to have a good standard of living in their retirement. You can find out more on our NHS Pension Scheme web pages. Individuals can still claim their pension benefits if they live abroad in retirement.

Consider designing a bespoke induction programme based on country of origin, such as a comparison of commonly used medications in home countries.

Good practice example – helping with cultural and language differences

Sheffield Teaching Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust shares guidance with new recruits to support them with terms and dialect – both clinical terms that they may not have heard (for example nil by mouth), and a basic A to Z of medical terms, times and units.

New overseas staff are also provided with some examples of local dialect to help overcome language barriers with other staff and patients as much as possible. Examples include things like 'brew' for cup of tea, 'nowt' for nothing and 'ta' for thank you.

Also consider incorporating the induction support available from professional regulators, professional associations and trade unions such as the Royal College of Nursing (RCN), British Medical Association (BMA), UNISON and Occupational English Test (OET).

The General Medical Council (GMC) runs a free workshop for overseas-trained doctors designed to help them settle into medical careers in the UK.

The King's Fund runs a free, short course to learn about the history of the NHS and how it all works and fits together.

BMA has a guide to working in the UK for internationally trained doctors, including information about how the NHS works.

OET has the success stories resource to help new recruits overcome common communication challenges.

PASTORAL SUPPORT

Consider the human factors that personally affect individuals during the first few months and beyond of living and working in the UK. Organisations with the best retention rates are those that have invested in dedicated people resource to provide essential pastoral support.

Your overseas staff will need bank accounts, National Insurance numbers, somewhere to live, access to shopping, public transport and other amenities. Helping them with these arrangements will make a big difference to how well they ease into life in the UK. Introducing some coordinated social activities can also prove very helpful in encouraging integration into teams.

Pastoral support arrangements can at times require 24/7 support from the trust, and be available in case of situations such as flight delays or cancellations. This should be considered in team planning and pastoral care requirements.

Launched in March 2022, the NHS Pastoral Care Quality Award is a scheme that supports NHS trusts to provide high-quality pastoral care to internationally educated nurses and midwives. Through this voluntary scheme, NHS trusts in England can apply for a quality award based on their international recruitment practices. To find out more please email: nhsi.workforce@nhs.net.

Good practice example – pastoral support ideas

North Lincolnshire and Goole NHS Foundation Trust has a strong emphasis on pastoral support for new international recruits. When candidates are offered a position they are sent an email with a guide of the local area including accommodation options, schools, churches and local landmarks. A dedicated onboarding officer is on hand to help with candidate relocation needs, and the trust will view houses on the candidates' behalf and provide a virtual tour.

When candidates arrive, they are taken around the local supermarket to pick up essentials and a welcome chat is organised to get a feel for their hobbies and interests so suggestions can be made to help social integration. An example of this for those interested in sport is a weekly game of football that the recruitment team have set up, which all new international starters are invited to play in alongside existing staff.

Good practice example – local university accommodation

One area that University Hospital Southampton NHS Foundation Trust had difficulty with was accommodation, with increased overseas cohorts. Not only was it costly to rent accommodation for staff, the trust also found it was taking up time supporting with domestic issues like repairs or issues with heating.

The solution the organisation found was working with Solent University, which had spare accommodation available. Putting new staff into university accommodation has not only worked out cheaper for the trust, but the accommodation has a laundry service and 24-hour reception so there's always support on hand to help the new recruits. Placing them in accommodation together also helps the settling-in process.

This accommodation is only offered to those in a training role, due to council tax and VAT arrangements. For example, those who require OSCE or additional training to attain professional registration.

Getting the basics right

1. Airport pick up

Meeting your overseas recruits at the airport when they first arrive and transporting them to their accommodation is a vital part of the pastoral support. This will help to settle the individual and orientate them to their new surroundings. It is good practice to have someone who they have met before during the interview process to welcome them, and always try and organise transport for them rather than explaining how to use public transport, which may be stressful and daunting.

2. Accommodation

Take the overseas recruits to collect the keys for their accommodation and ensure any contracts or paperwork is completed and signed. It is good practice to provide up to four weeks' accommodation and ensure the overseas recruit understands the process of repayment, if applicable. Some organisations that have limited or no accommodation have found it beneficial to make links with local university accommodation.

3. Banking and post office support

On their day of arrival, consider visiting the post office to pick up the Biometric Residence Permits and making them an appointment to set up a bank account. Consider establishing a relationship with the local bank so appointments can be booked in advance and large groups could be seen in a timely matter.

4. Getting their footprint in the UK

Encourage your staff to establish their footprint in the UK by registering for their National Insurance (NI) number and NHS number.

5. Financial support

It is good practice to provide some form of financial support to the overseas recruit on arrival. A salary advance of cash will ensure that the individual has access to money, in case there are any delays in the bank account being set up. Recruits coming from the Philippines or India for example will also not have the same level of local earnings to settle them into the UK, so a salary advance will provide much needed financial support. It is down to individual organisations to determine the reclaim period.

6. Transportation

Consider purchasing a pre-paid travel card for your overseas staff. If your organisation reclaims for this, ensure this is explained. If your organisation does not provide this element of pastoral care, as a minimum, support the individual to purchase a travel card with their salary advance.

7. Welcome pack

It is good practice to provide your new recruits with a welcome pack, to include information about the local area, doctors, dentists and emergency contacts. Also, provide essential groceries and household items such as milk, bread, butter, bedding, and toilet roll.

New recruits will want to contact family and friends in their home country to let them know they have arrived safely, so consider providing access to Wi-Fi/mobile data on arrival.

Good practice example – welcome pack essentials

Newcastle Upon Tyne Hospital NHS Foundation Trust provides new recruits with the following basics to get them set up in their accommodation on arrival (based on a house shared by three people).

- Mugs x 4
- Glass tumblers x 4
- 12-piece dinner set (bowls, dinners and plates)
- Plastic chopping board set
- Tea towels x 3
- Duvet set and pillow cases x 3
- Double duvet x 3
- Pair of pillows x 3
- Cotton hand towels x 3
- Cotton bath towels x 3
- Basic kitchen starter set (includes 4 sets of cutlery, basic kitchen equipment, pans and knife set).

Newcastle also provides food essentials which on average costs £30 per household/£10 each. This includes rice, noodles, bread, long-life milk, eggs, teabags, coffee, sugar, toilet roll, condiments, washing up liquid and laundry detergent. Most of the above are sourced from a major local supermarket.

Welcome pack checklist

- ✓ Groceries (milk, eggs, rice, noodles, bread, butter, coffee, tea).
 - ✓ Bedding, linen and pillows.
 - ✓ General supplies (toilet paper).
 - ✓ Kitchenware (crockery, kettle).
 - ✓ Pre-paid travel card.
 - ✓ UK SIM card.
 - ✓ Financial information - pensions, NI application, pay details, paying utility bills.
 - ✓ Union and professional association membership.
 - ✓ Health information - occupational, GP and dentist registration.
 - ✓ Emergency contacts.
 - ✓ Personal safety guidance.

Staff from previous cohorts are often keen to support the settlement of new overseas staff. It is good practice to ensure existing overseas staff feed into the pastoral support offer, make suggestions on how support can be improved, and participate in welcoming new staff.

8. Greeting lunch/welcome dinner

Organising coordinated social activities with previously recruited overseas staff, ward managers and other clinical staff can prove very helpful in encouraging integration into teams. Welcoming new recruits in your newsletter is also another way of helping them feel included in your organisation and encouraging integration.

9. Tour around the local town

Helping your overseas staff to find their way around the local community is a good way of familiarising them with their surroundings. This could include taking them to the local supermarket, the post office, helping them use public transport and showing them the local places of worship.

10. Peer support arrangements

Consider what additional one-to-one mentoring support your overseas staff may need to adapt to the cultural and working differences of the NHS. Do you have other employees of the same nationality who can provide professional or social support? Existing staff with lived experience of relocating to the UK could become a buddy for a new overseas recruit. Your local trade union representative may also be able to help set up peer networks in the workplace.

NHS England has produced case studies on how organisations are overcoming the challenges of accommodation for international nurses and AHPs, these are available on the NHS Futures Platform.

NHS England (South West) a single easy-to-read rental guide document on the NHS Futures Platform to help with renting a property in England. The guide is suitable for international recruits, but applicable to all staff anywhere in England and includes a step-by-step process to finding a property.

PROFESSIONAL SUPPORT

When your overseas recruits arrive, your initial focus will be on providing professional specific training and education and supporting them to adjust to new systems and ways of working. Be mindful that you may need to adapt your training if they are unfamiliar with technical language or equipment that they will be using.

Understanding the NHS – educational resources

International recruits are likely to have come from very different healthcare systems and may have little understanding of how the NHS works. Sharing material to help them understand its history and make-up is an important part of adjusting to new systems and ways of working. The King's Fund runs a free, short course to learn about the NHS.

Longer term, your overseas recruits should have access to the same learning and development opportunities and support for career progression as your UK workforce. Professional support is important across an employee's whole career and should be based on each individual's preferences and career aspirations. As part of this process they should be offered an annual personal development review and a personal development plan should be agreed.

It is important to support international recruits to save for their future and their retirement. The NHS Pension Scheme is one of the most comprehensive and generous in the UK and offers many additional benefits that may be attractive to international recruits, such as life assurance and ill health benefits. Individuals can still claim their pension benefits if they choose to live abroad in retirement

Also consider signposting staff to support available from the relevant professional regulators, professional associations and trade unions, such as the RCN, BMA and UNISON.

Resources for support available for NHS staff can be found on the NHS England website.

International recruits will need to know what fraud is, how to avoid it and what they can do if they get targeted. Think about having some top tips to share with your recruits. Fraud incidents should be reported to the police and the fraud prevention team. There is also information on the take five stop fraud website.

The RCN offers members a careers service with information and resources to support professional development.

The BMA offers overseas doctors a range of webinars, coaching courses, workshops and e-learning modules for professional development.

UNISON offers members a range of courses and workshops to support professional development.

NHS England has produced a pregnancy toolkit to help support employers and international employees on what they may be eligible for during pregnancy, maternity and paternity leave.

Including information about this in your welcome pack will help candidates and staff understand what to expect if they or their partner are or become pregnant.

Part of the NHS equality, diversity, and inclusion improvement plan is to implement a comprehensive induction, onboarding and development programme for internationally recruited staff.

The International Retention Toolkit includes information on making new recruits feel welcome. This includes information on preceptorship, buddying, induction and integration.

Pastoral Checklist

Prior to arrival

- ✓ Buddying and peer support arrangements, preferably with previously recruited overseas nurses.
- ✓ Ongoing professional development, career planning.
- ✓ Preceptorship or equivalent arrangements.
- ✓ Introduction to health and wellbeing offers provided by the trust. OSCE test date and travel organised.

RECRUITING TO RETAIN

The first six months in a new role typically influences whether a recruit stays for the long term, making induction, early pastoral and professional support crucial. Integrating staff into your organisation and setting out what is expected in a clear and consistent way can help the settling-in process. Effective mentoring, professional support and a supportive learning environment will enable them to be as productive as possible in their roles.

The essentials

You will need to have a comprehensive plan for induction, pastoral and professional support.

Have you considered the human factors that personally affect individuals during the first few months and beyond?

Are there other employees of the same nationality or a network that can provide professional or social support

What support do you provide to overseas recruits beyond induction?

Could you use the skills and knowledge of existing staff to support new recruits, for example through coaching or mentoring?

Do all staff have meaningful objectives and development plans?

Make sure you give candidates realistic expectations of the role and the location to reduce the likelihood of them leaving the organisation in the first few months.

Keeping in touch with staff between offer and start date can help to reduce post-offer drop-outs and is a great way of keeping candidates engaged in your organisation.

How to share international recruitment success stories:

Sharing news on websites, social media, or through external media statements is a great way to share success stories and good practices and a fantastic way to highlight the retention of international recruits. However, when sharing details about international recruitment, care must be taken to ensure the communications are in line with the Code of Practice \(COP\), for example, highlighting where a candidate may have traveled from. Guidance on how to share success stories in line with the COP can be found on the NHS Employers website.

Good practice example: robust induction for increased retention

University Hospitals Dorset NHS Foundation Trust believes having a strong induction programme that supports overseas recruits and existing clinical staff is essential for better job satisfaction and retention levels.

Its induction programme links clinical educators, ward leaders, HR teams, ethnic minority groups, and previously recruited overseas staff with new overseas recruits to support the induction journey. Teams across the trust, including the chief nursing officer, join welcome mornings, so overseas recruits can meet clinical and leadership teams.

The international recruitment process is just as big of a change for overseas recruits as it is for existing staff. It is therefore very important to support all staff involved in the process. This includes international recruits completing nursing profiles to enable new and existing staff to get to know each other as individuals before they arrive in the UK.

The trust also sends a welcome letter to overseas recruits so they know what to expect in their NHS employment journey. It signposts them to international nursing associations and community amenities, such as churches. International staff already in situ support OSCE preparation activities.

By supporting overseas recruits from pre-arrival to induction and professional development, the trust has seen increased retention levels of their international staff.

International retention checklist

Career pathways for all staff should be as rewarding as possible. Below is a checklist to ensure your offer to overseas staff is as fulfilling as possible.

- ✓ Review recruitment and onboarding offers for standardisation and transparency.
 - ✓ Ensure policies respond to any form of inappropriate or discriminatory behaviour for all staff and services users.
 - ✓ Provide means such as culturally competent leadership training to ensure all managers and mentors feel equipped to compassionately support international staff with their unique personal and professional learning needs.
 - ✓ Implement ways to find out individual staff's motivation for migration and why they have chosen to work in the NHS. Support them to actualise this to improve job satisfaction and fulfilment.
 - ✓ Compassionate and inclusive pastoral support at organisational level should be a priority - recognising the unique learner status of overseas staff alongside acknowledging the invaluable positive contributions made are determinants of successful integration and acculturation.
 - ✓ The power of communities and cultural networks are fundamental to successful migration, and therefore the personal and professional lives of our international colleagues both inside and outside of work.
 - ✓ Provide support with local language idiosyncrasies promotes a sense of belonging.
 - ✓ Career progression, such as recruiting into relevant specialisms, should be prioritised and included in career discussions and as part of appraisal reviews.

The new International Retention Toolkit has been developed along side the international recruitment toolkit to help employers support internationally recruited colleagues to stay, thrive and build lasting careers in the NHS.

See 'Supporting international staff' in the NHS Employers' Improving staff retention guide for further guidance.

EVALUATION

EVALUATION

During the planning stage of your international recruitment activity you will need to consider how you are going to evaluate the success of the process, the collaboration if you worked with partners and the impact of the activity. Being clear about what you want to achieve and making time to regularly review your activities will help you to assess how successful it is and whether changes need to be made.

Your evaluation plan should be created at the outset of the international recruitment activity, setting out clear recruitment objectives and targets and considering all the evaluation methods available to you.

What is your data telling you?

Once you have gathered your data and evidence, you can explore what it tells you about the success of your international recruitment activity in meeting its objectives.

As a starting point, your organisational workforce data will help to show what is happening with your international recruitment process. For example, high attrition at pre-employment stage. Have you looked at previous recruitment exercises and taken feedback into account? Of those interviewed and made appointable, how many took up the post? How long did the process take and, if they didn't end up starting in the role, do you know why? A review of this can help you identify any areas for improvement and prevent this pre-employment attrition in the future.

WHAT IS YOUR DATA TELLING YOU?

EVALUATION CHECKLIST

Evaluation checklist

- ✓ Gather your data and evidence in one place - check you have everything you set out to collect in your evaluation plan.
- ✓ Review the data and evidence to check it makes sense - are the results as you expected? If not, what is odd about the data and what might explain this?
- ✓ If you have been unable to collect elements of the planned data or something proves unusable, are there any options to use other data for a performance indicator?
- ✓ Work through your data and evidence - check performance against your objectives and targets and summarise findings.
- ✓ If you have a number of data sources, are they pointing to the same conclusions? If yes, you can be more confident about these. If not, try to understand why not.
- ✓ Assess to what extent objectives were met - look for reasons why things didn't work as planned and reasons for a particular success.
- ✓ If you worked with partners, assess how effective the collaboration has been - what has worked well and what needs to change.

The essentials

What does your workforce data tell you? Retention figures, pre-employment drop-outs, OSCE pass rates, agency spend etc.

Did you give staff opportunities to feedback? What are they telling you about their experience? Any trends?

Assess to what extent objectives were met. What is working well? What needs changing?

OVERSEAS NURSE AND MIDWIFE RECRUITMENT

UK PROFESSIONAL REGISTRATION

The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) updated its overseas registration process in October 2019, putting the whole application and streamlining requirements online.

Applicants create an NMC online account that will stay with them throughout their registration with the NMC. They will use the account to submit their registration application, upload copies of evidence required and pay relevant fees. They are also able to track the progress of their application through their account.

Once in receipt of a completed eligibility application, the NMC will confirm eligibility with the applicant's regulator (and where necessary their training institute) and they will be invited to take the two-part test of competence process and submit their full registration application.

Detailed information about the overseas registration process can be found on the NMC website.

What is the test of competence?

The test of competence is a test against the NMC's proficiency standards and has two parts:

The CBT is a multiple-choice examination that assesses theoretical knowledge and, is accessible around the world for applicants to access in their home countries administered by Pearson Vue. In the new test of competence, the CBT will be split into two parts (part A focusing on numeracy, and part B on theory).

The NMC have a hub that contains all the information candidates, recruiters and employers prepare for the ToC such as:

- Candidate handbooks
- Test specifications
- Blueprints
- Practice tests for the new CBTs
- An OSCE prep resource pack.

Guidance and information booklets are available on the NMC website. This includes CBT and OSCE guides for nurses and midwives, blueprints and specifications.

These pages include detailed booking instructions and course/module information. If an incorrect CBT has been sat, applicants will be required to resit and pass the correct CBT.

Due to the success of the Viva pilot (that provided candidates with an opportunity to address an error they made in the OSCE assessment, and if successfully addressed, gave the opportunity to rectify the error in the marking of that station), test centres have started to roll this out from Monday 23 October 2023.

This will be available to candidates across all fields of nursing, midwifery, and nursing associate. It will be applied to one station initially, will not be applied to written stations, and will only be available to candidates sitting their first attempt at the test.

The Viva does not change the level of preparation candidates need to undertake for the test, will not require new or additional learning and will not apply to those candidates that make errors in the test which constitute serious patient safety concerns.

For more information, please visit the NMC.

What is the OSCE?

It is based on UK pre-registration standards. Applicants are required to act out scenarios that nurses or midwives are likely to encounter when assessing, planning, delivering and evaluating care.

Approved OSCE test centres

There are five approved OSCE test centres, providing a choice of six locations to sit the OSCE: Ulster University (Derry), University of Northampton, Oxford Brookes University (Oxford and Swindon) at Northumbria University and The Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust. Each location offers the OSCE in the different fields of nursing, midwifery and nursing associate.

Language requirements

Applicants who trained outside the UK need to demonstrate that they have the right level of English to be able to deliver safe care.

There are three ways they can evidence their language competence:

- An approved English language test.
- Their qualification, if it was taught and examined in English where the programme comprised 50 per cent clinical interaction with patients, families, healthcare professionals and other service users, 75 per cent of which was in English.
- If they have undertaken registered practice for at least 12 months in the last two years in a majority English-speaking country where their language was assessed to gain registration in that country.

To make sure applicants do not fall victim to scams, make sure that applicants only register and pay for OET through the official OET website. If you have seen suspicious activity from organisations pretending to offer OET test services, please report this activity to OET.

Take a look at the Managers Guide for overseas nurses produced by the Capital Nurse International Recruitment Consortium. You might find it a helpful resource to support the OSCE preparation and pastoral support of your internationally recruited nurses.

Language tests

IELTS (International English Language Testing System) is one of the accepted examinations. This test assesses general language skills and is seen to be more academically focused.

To register with the NMC via IELTS, the overseas nurse must ensure they achieve the following grades:

- Grade 7.0 or above in speaking, listening and reading.
- Grade 6.5 or above in writing.
- Overall grade of 7.0.
- When combining, 6.5 for listening, reading, and speaking, or 6 for writing.

The OET (Occupational English Test) is an alternative test, which has been accepted by the NMC since 2017. It assesses language skills more specific to healthcare workers, including the ability to communicate effectively in medical scenarios, write a referral letter or understand a patient consultation.

The overseas nurse must ensure they achieve at least a grade B in the reading, listening and speaking sub-tests and at least a grade C+ in the writing sub-test.

Further information about the tests, including costs, remote testing, in-trust testing, sample questions and scoring criteria, can be found on the OET and IELTS websites.

From 2023 NMC extended the period for combining test scores from six to twelve months. Supporting information from employers is now accepted in some circumstances as supplementary evidence of English language proficiency.

Supporting information from employers is also accepted when: an individual narrowly misses out on a score in one of the four domains by 0.5 in the IELTS (6 for writing and 6.5 in the other domains) or half a grade in the OET (C / 250 or above in writing and C+ / 300 or above in the other domains); or they were trained and assessed in English in a country where English is not a majority spoken language, and who have been working for at least one year in a non-registered role in a health and social care setting in the UK.

More information on these changes and next steps can be found on the NMC website.

IMMIGRATION REQUIREMENTS

Upon successful completion of the CBT, the sponsoring organisation can assign a certificate of sponsorship (CoS) to the overseas nurse. They can then apply through UK Visas and Immigration (UKVI) for a Health and Care Visa as a skilled migrant worker under the skilled worker route. Overseas nurses have up to 12 weeks from the employment start date noted on their CoS to sit their first OSCE exam and achieve registration within eight months. They can be legally employed as a pre-registration candidate (band 4) during this preparation time.

See Sponsorship guidance for employers and educators for more information about the immigration process and what you need to know about the immigration system.

Employers should be aware of other immigration routes that provide the right to work without sponsorship, such as the British National \(Overseas\) Visa.

Immigration changes were announced in December 2023.

From 11 March 2024, care workers and senior care workers will be unable to bring dependents when they migrate to the UK, and only CQC-registered providers in England will be able to sponsor Health and Care Visa applicants.

Other changes, such as the increase in salary thresholds came into affect in April 2024. Health and Care Visa holders will continue to be exempt from paying the Immigration Health Surcharge (IHS).

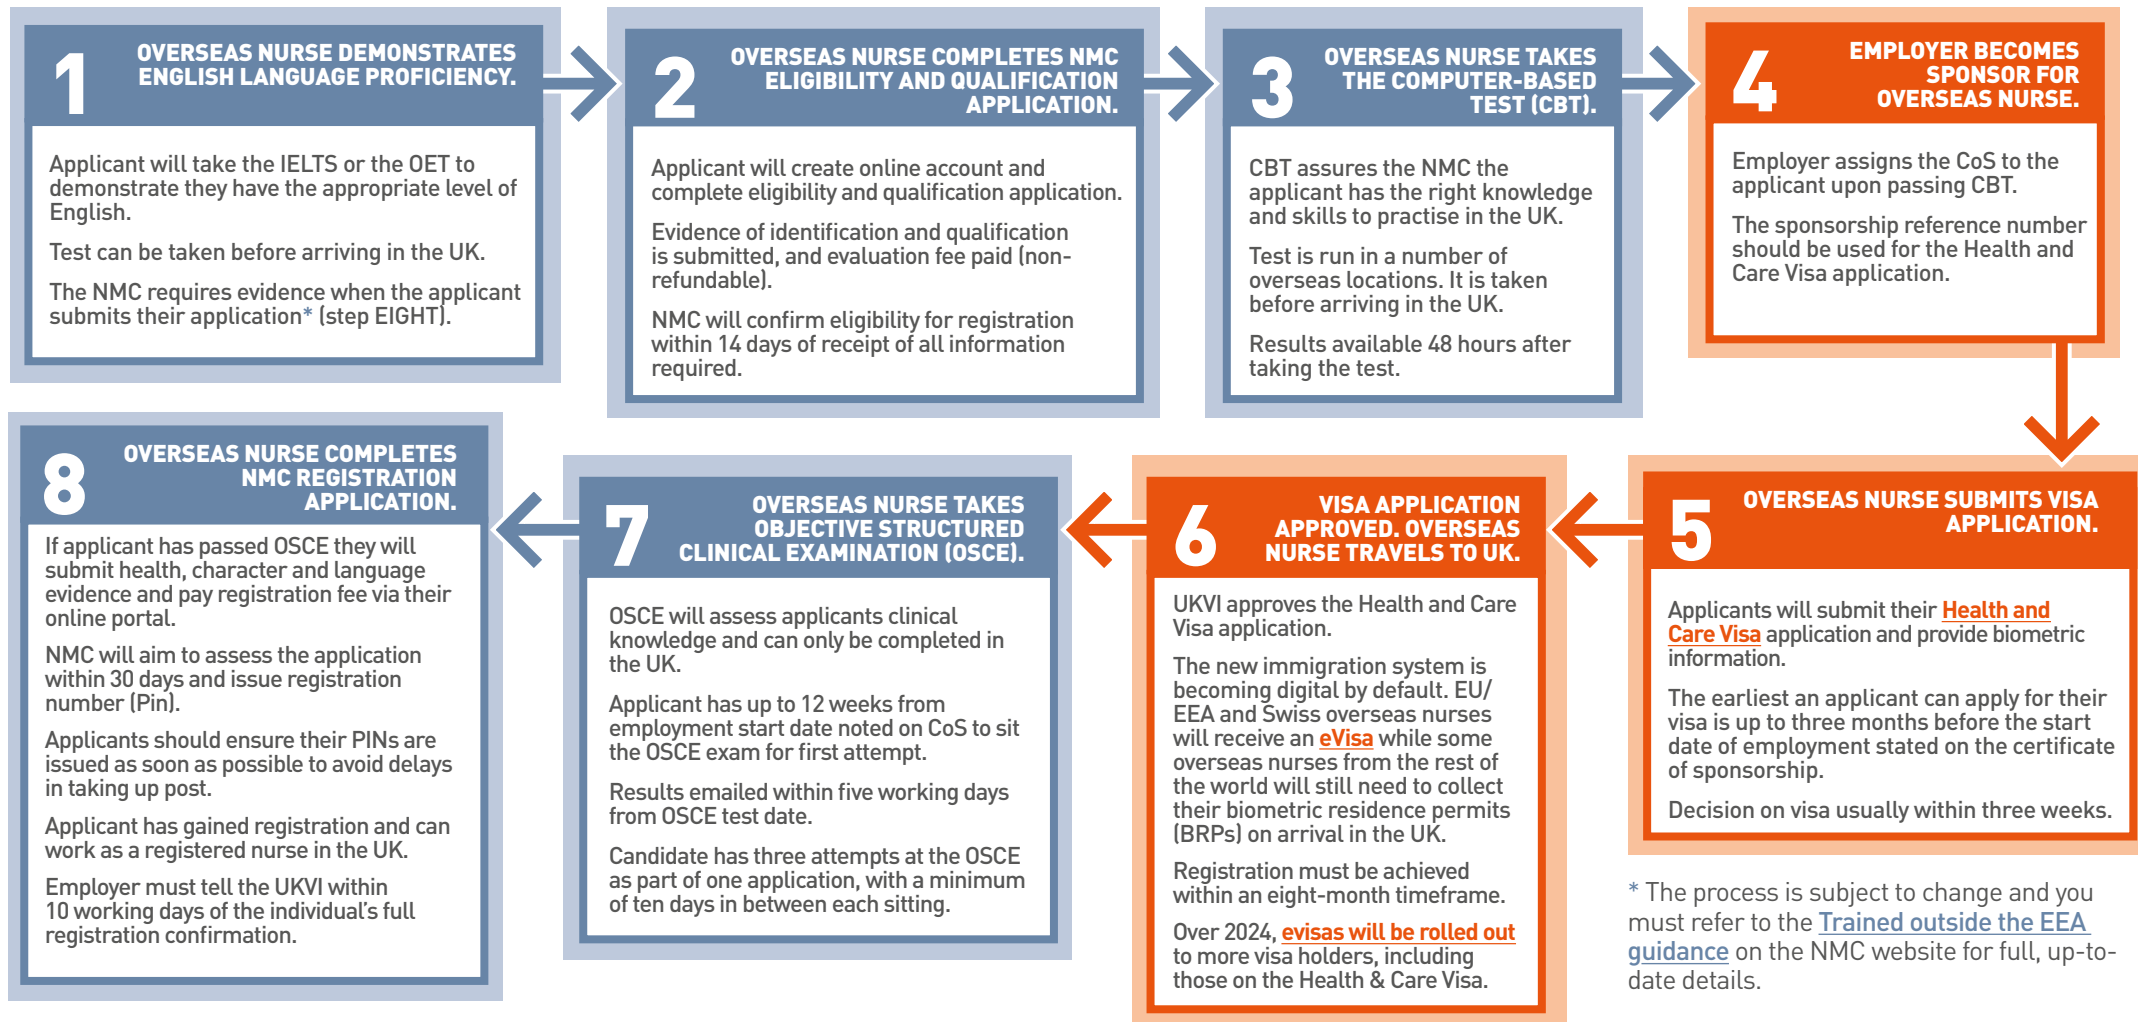

However the salary threshold increase and IHS will impact those employed by a Trust under a skilled worker route.

See the NHS Employers website for FAQs on how the changes will impact the NHS.

Step by step process

The diagram below shows a summary of the registration and immigration process for an overseas nurse who is out of country and will be sponsored under Health and Care Visa to work in the UK.

RECRUITMENT TIMELINE

If your organisation is new to international recruitment, this suggested recruitment timeline will give you an indication of what is possible in the best-case scenario. To help the applicants understand the recruitment process, highlight this timeline as part of the application process or include it in the information pack shared at the start of the recruitment process.

If your organisation is already conducting international recruitment, use the timeline as a benchmark. You should consider: Are your processes running ahead or behind of the timeline? Can you identify barriers slowing the process? How can you overcome these barriers?

INTERNATIONAL NURSING RECRUITMENT PASTORAL OFFER SELF-ASSESSMENT

How to guide

When considering internationally recruited nurses it is imperative to make sure your pastoral offer is exceptional and allows new recruits to feel welcomed and at home in both their new country and organisation.

NHS England have developed an easy to use pastoral self-assessment tool which will allow you to assess where your current pastoral offer currently sits against the gold standard and should be used in conjunction with this toolkit.

This self-assessment tool is laid out across the next few pages of this toolkit.

Scoring

When assessing your offer against the scale, you will need to consider which square you fit in but also what score you would give yourself. Please note down your score for each section in the scoring box to the left to find your total score calculated in the scale section.

This self-assessment is adaptable to support midwives.

OSCE PREPARATION PROGRAMME

Overseas nurses have up to 12 weeks from the date of employment (as stated on their CoS) to complete the OSCE. Support materials such as mock exams and the assessment criteria are available to candidates through each of the test centres. In the run-up to the examination, candidates must be given support and the opportunity to practice and prepare.

Supervised practice

When designing your OSCE preparation programme, consider if you will include a period of supervised practice in a clinical area during the training period. There are generally two different approaches adopted by organisations:

1. A bootcamp-style approach, which sees the candidates preparing for the OSCE examination intensively over a shorter period with no clinical practice.
2. A longer preparation programme, which sees candidates work clinically during the training period, with regular release for OSCE preparation.

There is no evidence to suggest one approach is more successful than the other.

Listen to the experience of organisations offering OSCE preparation to help inform the design of your preparation programme.

Resources to help design your programme

NMC nursing exam blueprints - set out the skills and procedures the overseas candidate needs to know and be able to demonstrate.

OSCE train the trainer - training courses are provided by the OSCE test centres.

OSCE facilitators network - programme facilitators and clinical managers come together to share good practice. To join the group, contact Fiona.Keeling@wsht.nhs.uk, network secretariat.

Best practice benchmarks

- ✓ The preparation programme should fully prepare the candidate for the OSCE and for employment as a band 5 registered nurse.
- ✓ The preparation programme should combine theory and practice within the classroom environment. Where possible, it should be supported by overseas nurses who have previously been through the OSCE process.
- ✓ Ensure candidates have plenty of time to practice their skills prior to taking the OSCE examination.
- ✓ Informal assessment should take place throughout the preparation programme and a formal mock OSCE should be undertaken at least three weeks before the OSCE date to make sure the candidate is ready for the examination.
- ✓ Individual feedback should be provided to candidates to ensure continuous learning.
- ✓ Study days should be offered as protected learning time and where candidates are working clinically during the preparation period, this should be incorporated into their shift allocation.
- ✓ Ensure the programme helps candidates to build up their confidence and ability to verbalise their knowledge.
- ✓ Pastoral support pre-and post-OSCE is essential. Stress levels may run high and candidates may need support to manage nerves or emotions.
- ✓ Consider creating a dedicated peer support group for the preparation period.
- ✓ It is important to recognise that the candidate is already qualified in their home country, so previous experience and education must be recognised.

ONGOING PROFESSIONAL SUPPORT

The end of OSCE preparation for your overseas nurses is just the beginning of their journey working for your organisation.

Preceptorship

The NMC strongly recommends that all new registrants have a period of preceptorship, including anyone who has entered a new part of the register and those newly admitted to the register having trained overseas. Where an overseas nurse is newly qualified and has no previous clinical experience, or they have not practiced clinically within the previous 12-18 months then, they should be offered a place on your existing preceptorship programme alongside other newly qualified nursing staff.

You might also consider offering the opportunity for a more bespoke/enhanced version of preceptorship, taking into consideration that some of your overseas nurses may have considerable clinical experience.

Good practice example: preceptorships

Whittington Health NHS Trust recognised that overseas nurses may have different needs to UK graduate nurses and so has personalised the preceptorship offer to address this. The trust's preceptorship lead meets with every new overseas recruit when they arrive to discuss their learning needs, career aspirations and agree a development plan. The lead then makes arrangements for an experienced nurse in their clinical area to facilitate the development plan.

Starting a structured and tailored preceptorship is one of many things that the trust finds can help make the transition to a new culture and way of working easier. This approach goes some way to ensuring overseas staff feel valued and part of the workforce, with benefits for retention as staff embark on a career of learning with the trust.

Good practice example: preceptorship support programme

Oxford University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust has developed an in-house bridging preceptorship programme to provide additional support to new IENs with adapting to working in the UK. The programme teaches the nurses about English culture, ways of working, different terminologies as well as supporting them with health literacy, raising concerns, challenging others and breaking bad news. Watch this video on international nurses and the facilitators who have taken part in the bridging programme at OUH.

Professional development

Your overseas nurses should have access to the same learning and development opportunities and support for career progression as you provide for your UK nursing workforce. Professional support is important across an employee's whole career and should be based on the individual's preferences and career aspirations. As part of this process they should be offered an annual personal development review and a personal development plan should be agreed.

For overseas nurses, as with all nurses, midwives and nursing associates registered with the NMC, professional development includes the requirement to revalidate every three years to be able to maintain their NMC registration.

Take a look at the Professional Development Guidebook produced by the CapitalNurse international recruitment consortium. You might find it a helpful resource to support the professional development of your overseas nurses.

NHS Pension

Overseas nurses should also be made aware of the benefits from joining the NHS Pension Scheme such as life assurance and benefits on ill health as well as different retirement options.

Sussex Community NHS Foundation Trust pre-CoS questionnaire

Just prior to the point of issuing the Certificate of Sponsorship (CoS), Sussex Community NHS Foundation Trust issues a questionnaire to the prospective new starter. It covers questions relating to accommodation and pastoral needs, base preferences, practical NMC application details and consent for social media involvement.

This enables the trust to tailor its offer and support to individual nurses.

Dear Candidate

We are approaching the stage of assigning you a Certificate of Sponsorship (COS) which means you will have progressed through all of our necessary pre-employment checks. Upon receipt of the COS you should proceed to book your VISA interview using the details on your COS.

If any details are not correct on your COS, please let us know as soon as possible.

For us to plan your employment effectively, we need some information from you.

International nursing associations

Nurses arriving to the UK from across the globe are faced with the challenge of adapting to working in the NHS and adjusting to a new culture. NHS England have been working with International Nursing associations that provide support to overseas nurses.

The overall aim of the group is to form a collaborative between associations to enhance the pastoral care to overseas trained nurses in England.

The role of the group is to enhance the overall pastoral support to overseas nurses through sharing of initiatives across the Diaspora associations and bringing together a common offer, with a focus on the group's key objectives of:

- health and wellbeing
- professional support
- pastoral care to international nurses.

COMMUNITY ROLES

International nurses working in the community require unique support, both for the nurses themselves and the employer teams supporting them.

This section of the toolkit has been designed to specifically support trusts in their recruitment efforts for international nurses in community settings. It should be read in conjunction with the rest of the toolkit and aims to draw attention to the areas that are of specific focus when hiring and onboarding international community nurses.

This section has been designed with the Queen's Nursing Institute, NHS England, and a national task and finish group with key stakeholder. This included representation from the national patient and community advocates forum (PCAF).

Challenges in recruiting international community nurses

Not all countries have community nursing roles and most internationally educated nurses do not have a clear understanding of what community roles in the UK look like. This has meant that NHS trusts have found it more difficult to recruit international community nurses than their acute counterparts. As such, NHS trusts have had to be innovative in establishing unique ways to identify potential candidates based on transferable skills and values-based recruitment.

In addition to marketing your organisation, it is also essential to think of how to market these roles in a creative way to different audiences.

Good practice example: CapitalNurse – community nursing skills checklist

With a reduced supply of similar UK community nursing roles in other countries, trusts are highlighting the transferable skills needed by candidates to be successful in these types of roles.

The CapitalNurse international recruitment consortium has a section of its website dedicated to community nursing in the UK. It includes a description of community roles in the UK, key clinical skills, and a quiz as well as a skills checklist designed to be used by nurses and their potential employer.

The skills checklist outlines 12 community nursing skill areas with specific competencies listed for each. All nurses are provided a skills checklist by the agencies prior to the interview. Nurses self-assess their level of previous experience for each, and the completed checklist is then shared with the employer, attached to the candidates' CVs. Work placements can then be matched to each nurse and their specific set of skills, based on the answers given.

The checklist can be used during community nurse interviews, as it provides a clear breakdown of each candidate's skillset and enables panellists to prompt candidates with questions about their experience. It is also helpful to the candidates as it gives them a clearer picture of the day-to-day tasks of community nurses in the UK. It can also be used as a tool for supporting further professional development for community nurses already in post.

Top tip

The CoS needs a work location. This can be updated in the sponsor management system, but it must match the location of the actual workplace. Sometimes placement allocation changes between offer and arrival, and there are fines if this information is not correct.

Sumintha's story

Sumintha qualified in 1999 in India and came to the UK in 2019. Once gaining her NMC registration she worked as a Band 5 on a hip fracture unit and after three months moved to the community as a Band 6 nurse.

Despite having previous experience working in a community setting, Sumintha was surprised to see just how different community services are in the UK. In India, Sumintha was used to delivering care in areas of high deprivation and was responsible for as many as 75 patients. In the UK, she was able to provide higher quality, person-centred care. This shift to more holistic care services can cause even an experienced community nurse anxiety when they adjust their provision of care.

Sumintha's top tips for onboarding international nurses are:

1. Ensure international nurses are aware of the opportunities in community services, for example, through shadowing during preceptorships.
2. If you are working with an agency, be sure they are aware of the needs of community nurses. For example, is there clear information on how to submit mileage claims or training and development opportunities within the trust?
3. Develop a robust adaptation programme that focuses on supporting transferring their skills from a hospital to a community setting and highlights how community services are structured in the UK.

Read more about Sumintha's journey via the Queen's Nursing Institute website.

Once international nurses are recruited to work in a community setting, one of the biggest challenges is how they adapt to different ways of working. This would apply to both how the NHS works, and how they adjust to working in the community. Some of the most different ways of working include driving to conduct home visits – as they may arrive to their home visits by different means. We have a driving checklist in the professional support section which has our top tips on supporting international community nurses in learning to drive in the UK.

Good practice example: Welcome to Norfolk guide for internationally trained nurses

Norfolk Community Health and Care NHS Trust published a guide to welcome internationally trained nurses to the trust. It covers a range of topics from getting to know local transport and travel, to looking after your mental wellbeing, and a list of key contacts at the trust.

For example, the guide details where in the local area international nurses might be able to find food products from the home country or specialized personal care products.

Myths about community nursing

With international recruitment to community nursing roles being fairly new to the UK, there are many myths about community nursing both from the perspective of recruitment teams and overseas nurses themselves.

On the following page are some myths and their respective truths about recruiting internationally to community roles.

Myths about community nursing

MYTH ✘	TRUTH ✔
Community nurses receive less pay than other areas of nursing.	Community nurses enter the NHS at the same rate as other types of nurses, and there are many opportunities for additional pay through late, weekend and bank shifts.
There is no career progression.	Community nurses can choose to specialise with a broad range of experiences earned while working in the community.
There is a lack of access to training and development opportunities.	Community nurses provide acute care in the home or other settings. They practice a wide range of skills in their daily tasks such as syringe drivers for palliative care, complex wound care, end of life care support, and advanced assessment and management of patients with chronic long-term conditions.
It is not safe to work in the community because you are a lone worker.	Community nurses have support for situations when they are alone, for example visiting a patient in their own home. Safety plans are in place, and colleagues are aware of where they are. There are also many opportunities to work with others and receive support from peers.
Newly or recently qualified nurses cannot (or shouldn't) start their career in the community because it will be too difficult, or you will de-skilled.	Newly qualified nurses are welcome in community nurse roles and have a wide range of options. They have opportunities for preceptorship, mentoring and support just like nurses in hospitals would get. Trusts and teams should provide lots of support to nurses new into the role and promote the safety measures in place while working with a high degree of autonomy.
Nurses have no support from medical and other professional colleagues.	Community nurses work autonomously; however, they have direct access to support from GPs, their community trust, line manager, and other members of the multi-disciplinary team just like in the hospital. This may include physiotherapists, occupational therapists, social workers, specialist nurses, volunteers and a wider range of other professionals all working to support the patient in their own home or community.

Preparing for recruitment

Marketing community trusts and community roles often can look different than other nursing roles and sectors, due to the lack of similar roles internationally affecting supply.

While there is generally recognition of global similarities with the delivery of care in hospital settings, many internationally educated professionals will not be familiar with the structure or function of community healthcare in the NHS.

Defining community care, the services undertaken by the organisation, communicating your offer, and the structure of the NHS is crucial to ensuring international arrivals recognise the difference.

There are many different job roles within community settings. The range of roles and different language used can make it difficult for both trusts and potential candidates to be best matched. Below are some of the different job titles available. Be sure to read the advertisement section for more information.

A resource pack has been created to help inform candidates about learning disability nursing, skills required, and the career choices available. This resource also contains links which employers will find useful.

The NHS Futures Platform has a designated section for internationally recruited mental health and learning disability nurses.

Top tips for recruiting international community nurses

Based on learning from community trusts who have started international recruitment, including Kent Community Health NHS Foundation Trust and Sussex Community NHS Foundation Trust, below are some top tips when recruiting overseas nurses to community roles.

- ✓ Conduct a skills audit of applicants before recruitment to assess their baseline clinical skills, as well as skills and suitability for other areas, such as driving.
- ✓ Create a candidate information pack for prospective applicants setting out the structure of the NHS, opportunities for roles and career progression, dispelling any myths about community working, information on your trust and the local area (see pastoral self-assessment checklist).
- ✓ Shortlist where possible staff with relevant experience of caring for a patient in a home or clinic, their values, and other transferable skills.
- ✓ Be sure to engage existing staff in the onboarding process. They may require additional support to feel confident in welcoming new team members, and this provides an opportunity to address any concerns or questions they may have.
- ✓ Be sure to discuss being open and sharing different things about others' cultures. Engage in discussions and existing staff should be involved in planning cultural awareness events or other materials.

Objective Structured Clinical Examination (OSCE) support

The delivery of OSCE preparation is potentially more complicated for community organisations. Considerations of how to manage the preparation work needs to factor in additional requirements such as:

- ability to travel for training
- location of new recruits versus the training venue
- option to outsource.

There is no separate OSCE for community nurses; they must still receive training for potential acute skills and scenarios. This might involve accessing a neighbouring organisation for support and advice and potential collaboration for the community situations.

Tailoring pastoral care

As community nursing involves working with a high degree of autonomy, pastoral care for overseas nurses requires more focus on ensuring that they feel supported and comfortable in visiting patients by themselves.

The ability to work independently is a key factor when working in the community. Therefore, pastoral care should be tailored to support international nurses with vulnerability, violence, and safety at work.

When looking at the pastoral self-assessment checklist, particular attention should be paid to nursing associations and local communities, local transport, and a tour of the local area.

It is also important to reflect the diversity of a community organisation. The changing geography, landscape, patient demographics and population profile across a large area are important considerations to ensure new arrivals expectations are aligned with reality.

Good practice example: Guidance for supporting accommodation

Solent NHS Trust has produced a guidance document to help in the sourcing and supporting of accommodation for international nurses. It outlines learning from their community pilot for international recruitment, including details on requirement specifications, types of accommodation, lengths of stay and other points to consider.

Good practice example: Pastoral support and induction for international recruits

University Hospitals Sussex NHS Foundation Trust has a well-established international recruitment programme and adapted quickly to the main challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. The trust maintained constant communication with the overseas nurses and shifted much of its OSCE programme online. To improve its programme, the trust listened to the needs of its overseas nurses and remained flexible when things changed. Read the trust's full case study to find out more.

Good practice example: Support for IENs to drive in the UK

As part of the recruitment package, Cambridge and Peterborough NHS Foundation Trust provided internationally educated nurses (IENs) coming into community roles with support to drive in the UK. This included a guidance document on 'Driving in the UK', purchased resources the IENs can borrow such as highway codes and UK driving books, and provided a one-off financial package of £450 to each IEN to help them pass and obtain their full UK driver's license. For more information, please read the full case study.

Kristine's story

Kristine came to the UK from the Philippines in 2021. She had ten years' experience working in the community in the Philippines before contacting an agency and joining a community trust. While there was an adjustment period in learning new skills for a UK community setting, she felt her prior experience helped towards her overall competency and confidence levels.

Kristine's top tips for supporting international nurses:

1. Ensure there is robust emotional support in place to support the transition to a new country. International community nurses will be working in settings and engaging in cultures that are very different from their own, and time and support will be needed in this transition.
2. Give international nurses as much practical information as possible to make sure they are ready and supported.

Read more about Kristine's story.

There are added complexities when considering accommodation for community trusts as many services are provided within rural settings. Careful consideration needs to be given to the location of any accommodation that's provided particularly in the context of transportation between home and work which either needs to be within walking distance or on good public transport routes which cover a variety of shift patterns (for example evenings, weekends, and bank holidays).

Community nurse pastoral care checklist

In addition to the pastoral self-assessment checklist, employers should also consider the actions below.

- ✓ Consider having a dedicated pastoral care support role to conduct research into options for accommodation, travel arrangements, and communication in a flexible way.
- ✓ Within induction and support, ensure there is training on independent and lone working, how to protect yourself and keep safe at work. Ensure they have access to key telephone contacts.
- ✓ As part of preceptorship, include a glossary of common phrases they are likely to encounter on the job as well as local accents, dialogues, and colloquialisms.
- ✓ Keep open communication and understand if candidates would like to bring their family members over. Consideration needs to be given to when family reunion may occur, what support can be offered, and if you can link up with other local services to provide employment support.
- ✓ Keep a flexible approach and consider all options for accommodation within your geographical location including working in partnership with other providers such as universities, colleges, and local acute trusts or consider serviced accommodation.
- ✓ Continue to signpost staff to support available from the relevant professional regulators, professional associations, and trade unions, such as the RCN, BMA, and UNISON.
- ✓ Continue to signpost staff to International Nursing Association Diaspora groups, see the ongoing professional support section for contact information.
- ✓ Keep a list of local churches and other social groups, international food stores, hairdressers, and signpost staff to these resources.

Professional support

Advanced skills can be practiced in the community and nurse led services are always expanding. Generic role profiles are helpful as the UK Visas and Immigration requires a description of duties when issuing Certificates of Sponsorship. This reduces complications if staff move internally between roles.

It can take up to 12 months for a new member of staff to achieve all competencies required to practice as a Band 5 nurse independently. The education and practice development team should ensure a training needs analysis is completed and a competency profile is developed to support the knowledge and skills acquisition. Prescribing courses and advance practice courses are available to support the development of autonomous practitioners.

Francis's story

Francis came to the UK from the Philippines in 2000. He was supported by an IR facilitator and had a three-month adaptation programme but had to be proactive in seeking a coach that was another international recruit, which was supported by the trust's senior management team. This helped prepare his career development, and he is now an associate director of nursing.

Francis's top tips to support international nurses would be:

- 1. Ensure coaching and mentoring is available from a very early stage of the onboarding process.
- 2. IR leads should have early and consistent communication with new recruits to support them in everything from setting up a bank account to linking into the international nursing associations.
- 3. Discuss career progression goals during 1-2-1s and appraisals, to support their career development and overall retention levels.

Read more about Francis's story.

One of the biggest challenges for international community nurses is learning how to drive in the UK. Community nurses do home visits, and some areas require nurses who drive as patients' homes are not near each other. However, countries such as India and the Philippines do not require nurses to learn to drive for work purposes.

Driving checklist

Driving is a key requirement in community nursing because of the large number of supplies and equipment that are needed when visiting patients. The Queen's Nursing Institute has support for international nurses to drive in England. When recruiting community nurses internationally, the following areas need to be considered:

- ✓ Provide nurses with information on driving in the UK (i.e. how will they obtain a vehicle once in the UK, the steps needed to drive in the UK in the long term, information on the local road system, rules of the road etc.). Government sources like driving in the UK are a good source.
- ✓ Nurses who are eligible to drive in the UK may benefit from a confidence course to help them familiarise themselves with the UK road network and driving conditions. One such course is the UK Familiarisation Course (some of the things covered include: the law, defensive driving, motorways, dual carriage ways, town driving, country lane driving).
- ✓ Depending on the country of origin driving lessons and a test in the UK may still be required even if a licence is held. This government resource can help determine if you can exchange a foreign driver's licence.
- ✓ Volunteer driver schemes might help internationally education nurses needing to travel while they are working towards their own driving competence.
- ✓ Visits could be clustered, for example to large care homes to reduce travel.
- ✓ Appointing a driving instructor may be more efficient than financing lessons depending on the number of nurses being recruited and the length of the recruitment campaign.
- ✓ Learning to drive takes time – staff who cannot drive may not reach the required standard within the expected time.
- ✓ Access to hire/pool cars and NHS lease cars might be an option to help with finding a vehicle in the first few months.

OVERSEAS DOCTOR RECRUITMENT

UK PROFESSIONAL REGISTRATION

The General Medical Council (GMC) sets the standards that international medical graduates must meet in order to register as a doctor in the UK. There are various routes to obtain registration with a licence to practise in the UK. The route that will be applicable will depend on the training and experience of the doctor you are employing.

There are some postgraduate qualifications acceptable outside the UK for GMC registration, but in most cases, doctors from non-EEA countries also need to pass the Professional and Linguistic Assessments Board (PLAB) test to demonstrate that they have the necessary skills and knowledge to practise medicine in the UK.

Many international medical graduates also have to show the GMC that they have an adequate standard of English. For most doctors this is demonstrated by obtaining a satisfactory score in the International English Language Testing System (IELTS) or Occupational English Test (OET).

Professional standards

It can be difficult for doctors new to the UK and the NHS to adjust quickly. It is vital that you put in place adequate support in transitioning to new professional environments and consider the new systems and ways of working that might be required from your overseas recruits.

There are resources to help this adjustment:

- GMC core guidance, Good Medical Practice, describes what it means to be a good doctor, professional values and behaviours.
- GMC free learning session, Welcome to UK Practice. The session will help doctors new to practice, or new to the country, to understand the ethical issues that will affect them and their patients on a day-to-day basis.

- The NHS GP International Induction Programme provides a supported pathway for overseas qualified GPs to be inducted safely into NHS General Practice.
- The BMA gives members access to practical online guidance on all aspects of medical ethics.

What is the PLAB?

The Professional and Linguistic Assessments Board (PLAB) test is the main method used by the GMC to ensure international medical graduates have the necessary knowledge and skills to be granted full registration and a licence to practise in the UK. Doctors wishing to take the PLAB test must have already successfully completed IELTS or OET.

The first part of the PLAB test can be taken at a number of test centres overseas, but the second part must be taken in the UK. Further details about the PLAB test, including dates, test centres and costs, is available on the GMC website.

Candidates must pass both parts of the test within a maximum of four attempts at each.

Part one - Written knowledge test which is held at various locations around the world.

Part two - Objective Structured Clinical Examination (OSCE). The OSCE is held at the GMC clinical assessment centre in Manchester.

PLAB preparation programme

Familiarise yourself with the test blueprint, to understand what is expected of doctors to pass the PLAB test and the level at which they are assessed. This will help you if you are supporting candidates to pass through the PLAB route.

It will also help to be familiar with the test blueprint during the pre-employment stage, to satisfy yourself that doctors who have already passed the PLAB test have the necessary knowledge, skills and experience for the role you are employing them to do. They will be entitled to apply for GMC registration having successfully passed the PLAB test.

Resources to prepare overseas doctors for working in the UK

Good medical practice - guidance and interactive online tool, setting out the professional values and behaviours expected of doctors.

Welcome to UK Practice - free GMC workshop to support overseas doctors adapt to working in a different culture.

Living and working in the UK - guidance and support materials for overseas doctors.

NHS Induction Programme for International Medical Graduates - welcoming and valuing international medical graduates in UK clinical practice.

Also consider signposting staff to support available from the relevant professional regulators, professional associations, royal colleges, and trade unions. Consider how working with these groups, such as the Academy of Medical Royal Colleges, can support the IR process and international doctors should they choose to join as members.

Language tests

Applicants will need to achieve the required score in one of the GMC's accepted language tests, unless one of the following applies:

- the applicant can evidence their primary medical qualification was taught and examined in English and acquired less than two years ago
- the applicant can evidence that they have worked in a medical capacity for the past two years or more in a country where English is the first and native language
- the applicant submits a copy of their UK job offer alongside an English language reference form, signed off by an NHS organisation listed as a designated body. This is unlikely to be accepted if an IELTS or OET test has previously been failed.

Further terms and exemptions apply. Please consult the GMC website for further details.

The IELTS (International English Language Testing System) is one of the accepted tests if the above does not apply. This test assesses general language skills and is generally considered to be more academic.

The overseas doctor must ensure they achieve the following grades:

- grade 7.0 or above in speaking, listening, reading and writing
- overall grade of 7.5.

The OET is another test that can be completed to obtain GMC registration, having been accepted since 2018. It assesses language skills more specific to healthcare workers, including the ability to communicate effectively in medical scenarios, write a referral letter or understand a patient consultation.

The overseas doctor must ensure they achieve at least a B grade in the writing, reading, listening and speaking sections.

Further information about the tests, including costs, sample questions and scoring criteria, can be found on the OET and IELTS websites.

Immigration requirements

Overseas doctors will need a job offer and Health and Care Visa under the skilled worker route to live and work in the UK.

Overseas doctors can come to the UK on a standard visitor visa in order to take the second part of the PLAB test. The visa will permit them to stay in the UK for a temporary purpose, usually for up to six months.

In early 2024, the government implemented immigration policy changes including restricting care workers and senior care workers from bringing dependents with them when they migrate to the UK. The increase in salary thresholds also impacts those employed under a skilled worker and health and care visa when taking out a new application, renewing or extending their visa.

See the NHS Employers website for more details on how the changes will impact the NHS.

STEP-BY-STEP PROCESS: REGISTRATION AND IMMIGRATION

The diagram below shows a summary of the registration and immigration process for an overseas doctor who is out of country and will be sponsored under Health and Care Visa to work in the UK.

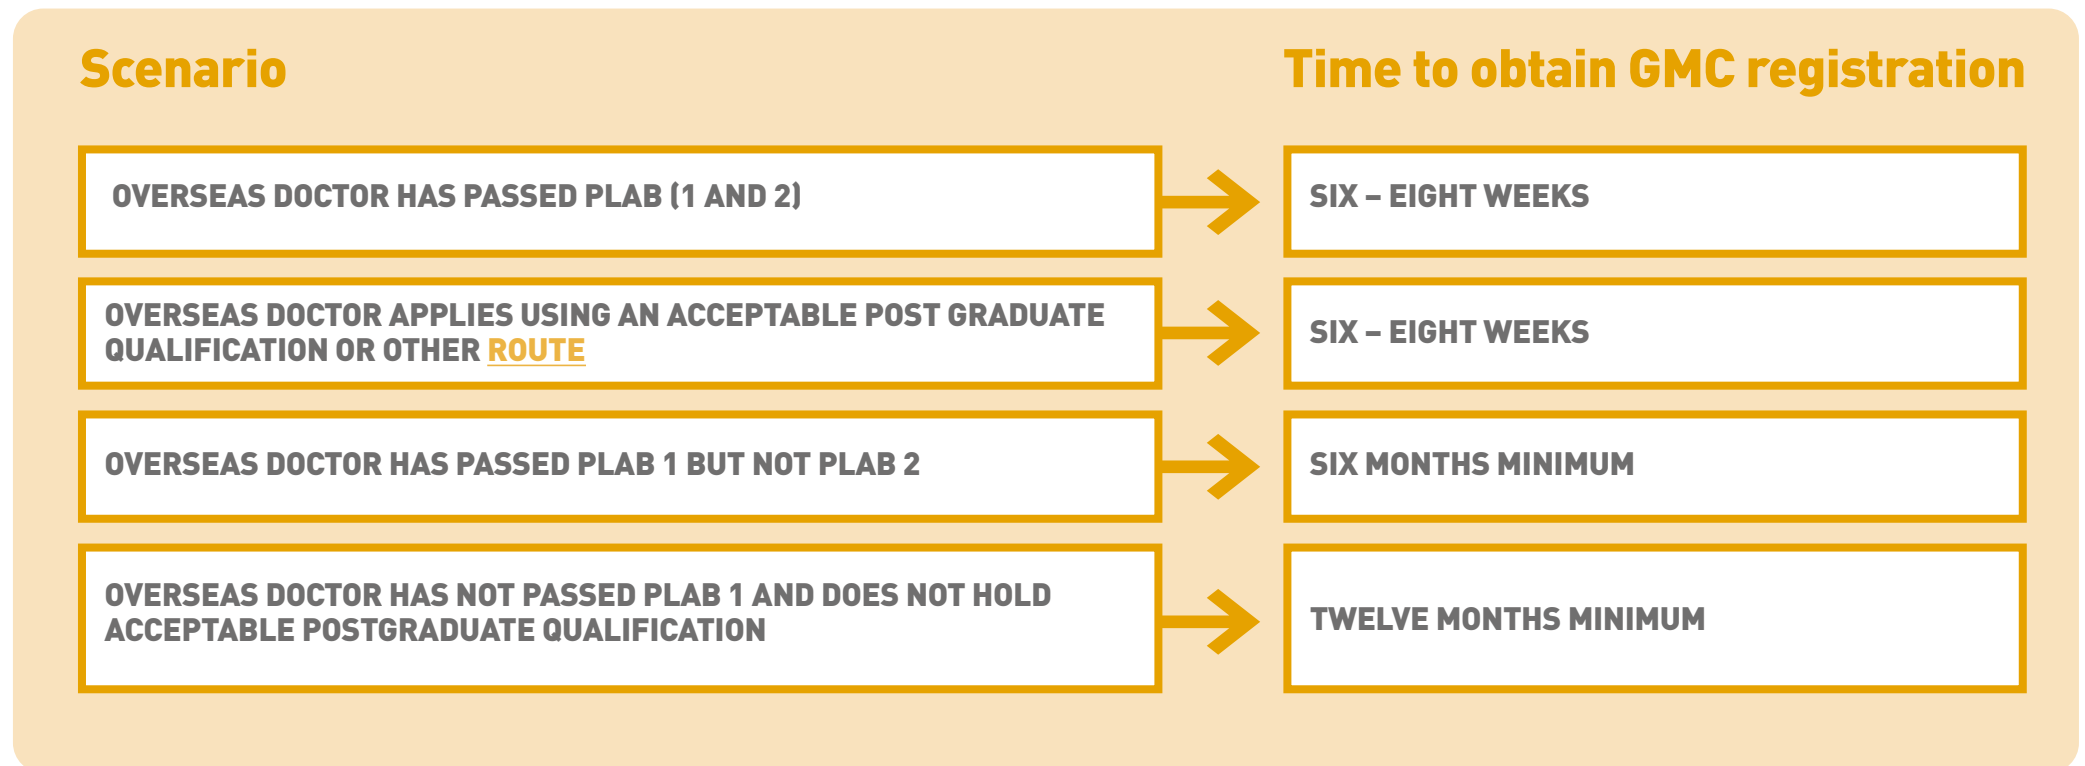

*This diagram provides a summary of the registration process. The process is subject to change and you can refer to the registration and licensing guidance on the GMC website for full, up-to-date details.

RECRUITMENT TIMELINE

The process of recruiting an overseas doctor, which includes them obtaining a visa and becoming registered with the GMC, can take longer than you might expect. For some doctors it can take 18 months from applying to starting in post. Timescales will depend on the stage at which the doctor is in the GMC registration process when you interview them. It is important to consider your timescales and how to pitch your recruitment to attract the right candidates and minimise delays.

PASTORAL AND RELOCATION SUPPORT

Overseas doctors should be supported in the same way you would for all new recruits on arrival when they are new to the UK and the NHS. Your support may include help with organising transport and finding accommodation, schools and other local facilities as well as support with administrative tasks such as setting up bank accounts and mobile phones. See the induction and beyond section for best practice.

If a doctor's partner wants to pursue their own career in the UK, whether that is in healthcare or in another profession, also consider what support your organisation can offer. For example, supporting them to learn or improve their English and to find suitable work.

High importance should also be placed on ensuring that ongoing pastoral and professional support networks are in place for doctors transitioning to new social, cultural and professional environments.

The effort put into assisting and integrating overseas doctors and their families will be key to them being able to work at their potential and choosing to stay with your organisation.

Fair to Refer report

Research commissioned by the GMC has found disproportionate referrals of Ethnic Minority doctors to fitness to practise processes.

The report states this could be driven by:

- poor induction and support in transitioning to new social, cultural and professional environments
- working patterns that leave them isolated and in roles lacking exposure to learning experiences, mentors and resources
- poor feedback from managers who are avoiding difficult conversations, but which could prevent problems later.

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Your overseas doctors should have access to the same learning and development opportunities and support for career progression as you provide for your UK medical workforce. Professional support is important across an employee's whole career and should be based on the individual's preferences and career aspirations. As part of this process, they should be offered an annual personal development review based on the GMC's core guidance, and a personal development plan should be agreed.

For overseas doctors, as with all doctors registered with the GMC, professional development includes the requirement to revalidate every five years to maintain their licence to practise and their registration with the GMC.

Overseas doctors should also be made aware of the benefits from joining the NHS Pension Scheme such as life assurance and benefits on ill health.

Listen to the personal experience of Devika Colwill, overseas consultant psychiatrist, who talks about the importance of professional and pastoral support to help doctors adapt to cultural differences, cope with pressure and perform to their best ability.

Medical Training Initiative

The Medical Training Initiative \(MTI\) is a scheme that provides an entry route for overseas doctors wishing to train and develop their skills in the NHS before returning to their own country. The scheme allows suitably qualified overseas postgraduate medical specialists to undertake a fixed period of training in the UK, normally within the NHS, before returning to their own healthcare systems.
